Tennessean Killed When Auto Runs Into Wrecking Truck; Six Hurt Near Warrenton

Two persons were killed and at least 20 injured in Sunday traffic crashes in the District area. Six of those injured were in two automobiles which collided head on at Opal Crossroads, near Warrenton, Va.

Mac Claude Lee, 30, of Kingsport, Tenn., was fatally injured when the automobile in which he was a passenger rammed into the rear of a wrecking truck near Wytheville, Va., on Lee highway. Five companions were injured, four seriously.

Roger Washington, colored, 19, of Marshville, Va., was killed early yesterday when the car in which he was riding crashed into a culvert on the Defense highway near Collington, Md. The driver of the car, Arthur Lanier, colored, was charged with manslaughter by Prince Georges County police.

A passenger in Lanier's car, James Carter, colored, 14, of Bowie, Md., was taken to Emergency Hospital by the Glendale Rescue Squad.

All Victims in One Car

Eight persons were in Warrenton hospitals after two crashes on different Virginia highways. Six of the injured, brought to hospitals by a private ambulance and the Warrenton Fire Department, were listed as Allen Lee Umberger, of Bealeton, Va.; Park P. Bierbower, 21, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Lester Bierbower, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Miss Jean Richter, of Harrisburg, and Harry Nesselrodt, 22, of Remington, Va.

All victims of the crash were unconscious long after reaching hospitals. Police said Nesselrodt and Umberger were in one automobile and the other victims all in the second.

In a collision on Lee Highway near Bull Run, Va., Mrs. Thelma Willetts, of 1963 S street northwest, and her son, Robert, 7, received injuries which sent them to Fauquier County Hospital at Warrenton. Freeman Willetts, the injured woman's husband, was slightly bruised.

Injured in the crash near Wytheville in which Lee was killed were Mrs. Bruce Boothe, fractured thigh and face injuries; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Taylor and Mrs. and Mrs. Bob Wassum, all of Marion, Va. Taylor, who Sheriff W. C. Klinger said was driving the automobile, was released under $1,000 bond on a charge of reckless driving.

Three Hurt Near Laurel

Three women were in an undetermined condition in Casualty Hospital with injuries suffered in a head on auto crash on the Baltimore pike near Laurel Sanatorium. Their car collided with another driven by Bonny Hughes, 50, who was charged by Hyattsville police with failing to keep to his own side of the road.

Taken to Casualty Hospital by the Branchville Rescue Squad were Leile Fern, 35, of 3100 Russell road, Alexandria, Va.; Naomi Peknezian, 35, of 1721 Rhode Island avenue northwest, and Peggy Duncan, 27, of 1808 Connecticut avenue northwest. James and Lillian Ramsey, colored, passengers in Hughes' car, were treated by a private physician.

Neutrality Debate's End Held in Sight

Byrd Attacks 90-Day Credits; Pittman Prepares Shipping Changes

By William V. Nessly.
Post Staff Writer

End of the Senate's neutrality debate this week, with immediate opening of the fight over amendments to the embargo repeal bill, was forecast last night as statements and radio talks by Senators continued to emphasize the issue.

Expressions of hope among Administration leaders in the Senate that debate could be concluded by Wednesday met with a quick challenge from repeal opponents who insisted there were enough opposition speakers to require the entire week. There was general agreement, however, that debate was unlikely to run over into next week.

Byrd Insists on Cash

Interest moved ahead to the time when amendments will be called for and drives will get under way to lighten restrictions on American shipping and to remove the 90-day credit provision in the bill for belligerent purchasers of American goods.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, while supporting the Administration effort to end the munitions embargo, insisted the credit provision should be dropped despite sponsors' contention that such short-term credit, in the commercial export field, is tantamount to cash.

"Cash and carry should literally mean what it says," Byrd declared in a statement. "If we begin with a 90-day credit, it is likely and probable that longer and more credit will be extended so that the same conditions which existed in the last World War will be repeated."

Isolationists Split

It was made known, meanwhile, that Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, today or tomorrow will present to Democratic members of the committee who drafted the pending bill three proposed amendments intended to grant greater rights to the American merchant marine than are provided in the bill.

The changes are designed to permit American vessels to carry on

Subs Open Fire With No Warning

One British, 2 French Vessels Destroyed; 414 on Royal Oak Reported Rescued

By Raymond Daniell.

London, Oct. 15.—At a port in the south of England today some 400 men, women and children came ashore, some on foot and some in stretchers. They were castaways from three merchant vessels, two French and one British. There were no Americans among the casualties.

The three ships sent to the bottom after shell fire swept their decks were the year-old Lochavon, of British registry, and two French liners, the Bretagne and the Louisiane. Most of the casualties occurred on the 19,108-ton Bretagne.

In each case the destroyed ship was attacked without warning by shell fire from U-boats firing from the surface. The attacks all took place in the darkness before dawn Saturday and late Friday night. Where the attacks occurred was not revealed but since all survivors were landed today, it was assumed it was at a considerable distance offshore.

Try to Wreck Wireless

In each case the submarines first tried to put the wireless out of commission, and crew and passengers had to scramble for boats to escape drowning. Most of the casualties, it was believed, resulted from shellfire.

It is believed that 15 lives were lost in the two French sinkings—14 from the Bretagne in addition to the first mate of the Louisiane.

The warship that went to the Lochavon's assistance also received the distress signal from the Bretagne. After seeing that the Lochavon's boats were safe and the sea was fairly calm, she went to the French liner's assistance, signaling that she would return to the Lochavon later.

Two Shells Fired at Boats

The warship reported that the submarine, after ordering the ship to halt, fired two shells at the boats as they were being lowered. The ropes parted and women and children, hit by shell splinters, were flung into the sea.

Some of the passengers had to swim nearly two hours before being picked up. One French colonial soldier supported his seven-year-

Turks Reject Soviet Plan To Partition Rumania

Moscow Parley Stalled; Bulgaria Calls 450,000 Reserves to Frontier

By Robert B. Parker, Jr.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Istanbul, Oct. 15.—Turkey has taken precautionary military measures, it became known tonight following receipt of reports of the massing of Soviet Russian troops in the Caucasus on the Turkish and Iranian (Persian) frontier.

The Turkish action was taken as the Russian-Turkish talks in Moscow, under way for several weeks, apparently reached a deadlock.

(The official Soviet News Agency, Tass, was quoted over the Moscow radio Sunday as denying that Russia had reinforced her troops recently in the Caucasus.)

Fleet At Dardanelles

The Turkish fleet was at anchor tonight at Chanak, in the Sea of Marmora, between the Mediterranean and Black Sea.

The newspaper Journal d'Orient said that a meeting of Turkish mobilization directors had been held late this week.

The newspaper Republique stated that "feverish preparations" were taking place at Izmir, in the Dardanelles, for antiaircraft exercises. (The Dardanelles, controlling the Black Sea's outlet to the Aegean and Mediterranean seas, are fortified by Turkey.)

Meanwhile, Turkish military leaders watched Bulgaria, where an estimated 450,000 reservists have been called up for October 20.

This action, it was noted here, was taken soon after the return to Sofia of Bulgarian Air Ministry Chief Boydeff from Moscow, where he conferred with Soviet officials shortly after the recent visit there by German Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop.

Rejects Russian Demands

Turkey's Foreign Minister Saracoglu, it was learned on good authority, flatly refused three Russian demands on his nation. He is head of the Turkish delegation in Moscow.

[Whether Turkey's stand meant collapse of the Moscow negotiations remained unclear. Conflicting reports from Moscow said variously that negotiations were in apparent deadlock and that conclusion of a pact was believed near.

[International News Service, in an Istanbul dispatch, said official quarters indicated the talks were at an end, but added that no facts were forthcoming regarding the details of any pact that might have been drawn up. Officials denied that any accord had yet been signed.

[Authoritative sources were quoted to the effect that any Russian invasion of Iran or Iraq would be regarded by Turkey as an act of war.—Editor's note.]

The Soviets were said to have asked Turkish recognition for the partition of Poland, formation of a neutral Balkan bloc under Russian-German sponsorship and virtual partition of Rumania for the benefit of Russia and Bulgaria.

Saracoglu was said to have agreed only to the maintenance of Turkish Postmaster General Dedicates Huge Airport At North Beach, N. Y.

By the United Press

New York, Oct. 15.—The United States air fleet will never be used aggressively against any nation, Postmaster General Farley said today at the dedication of the $40,000,000 North Beach airport—the "world's flying center" of the future.

Nearly 200,000 persons, one of the largest crowds ever to gather at any airport in the United States, attended the formal opening of the new air terminal for New York City and witnessed an air show staged by 57 Army, Navy and Marine planes.

Farley, and the other Federal and city officials who participated in the ceremonies—Mayor LaGuardia, and Col. F. C. Harrington, Federal Works Projects Commissioner—spoke from a platform erected on the 6,200-foot concrete apron in front of the Administration Building.

The Postmaster General suggested, however, that we "continue to encourage the construction of these air forces so that when we ex-

London Press Castigates Lindbergh

Accuses Flier Of 'Shooting Off His Mouth Again'

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 15.—Sections of the London press assailed Col. Charles A. Lindbergh today for "apparently developing the Hitler mind" and "puerile attempts to split our empire."

The attacks were focused on his assertion in a broadcat Friday night in Washington that "sooner or later we (in the United States) must demand the freedom of this continent and its surrounding islands from the dictates of European power."

Peter Wilson, columnist of the Sunday Pictorial, prefaced a long, critical review of Lindbergh's career with the words:

"American Troublemaker Number One Has Been Shooting Off His Mouth Again."

"This international busybody took it upon himself to challenge Canada's entry into the fight," Wilson declared.

Describing "the history of Lindbergh" as "an interesting if somewhat unpleasant document," he wrote of the flier's visits to Germany and Soviet Russia and said "the Gross Goering (Field Marshal Goering) invited him as the guest of honor to a very private luncheon party."

He recalled Lindbergh's acceptance of a German decoration in 1938 and added: "A lot of people thought it should have been a double-cross."

Wilson then attacked the broadcast, saying:

"I imagine that millions of other 'free-born Americans' must have switched off their radios with the feeling that 'Lindbergh, the Nazi

Near-Hurricane Lashing Its Way Toward Bermuda

Miami, Fla., Oct. 15 (U.P.).—A tropical storm in the Atlantic, with winds possibly of hurricane intensity over a limited area, was located tonight about 275 miles south-southwest of Bermuda, moving in a northeasterly direction.

The Federal hurricane warning system said in an advisory issued at 9:30 p. m. (E. S. T.) that the storm had increased in intensity and was attended by heavy gales and "possibly a limited area of hurricane winds"—75 miles an hour or more.

A report of 70-mile-an-hour winds came from a vessel south of the storm's center, which at 7 p. m. (E. S. T.) was located 275 miles south-southwest of Bermuda.

Dutch Refuse Nazi Request for Military Maps

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

The Hague, Oct. 15.—The Netherlands general staff, which believes chances against a German invasion of this country are four to one, nevertheless is taking no chances.

Last week the staff received from Berlin—as a gift from the German army—1,500 complete sets of Nazi military maps, showing the heights of land, valleys, lakes, rivers, roads, railroads, villages and woods in the Reich.

Two days later the German military authorities asked the Dutch to return the courtesy by sending to Berlin 1,500 sets of their own maps.

The Dutch politely refused, or, rather, they replied they had no extra maps.

Finns Uneasy Over Report of Soviet Impasse

Situation Deemed To Be Serious but Not Threatening

By A. Marcus Tollet.

Helsinki, Oct. 15.—It was officially stated tonight that the Finnish government considers the situation unchanged and that it remains "serious but not threatening."

The guarded nature of this wording caused some uneasiness here, particularly as there were rumors differences of opinion necessitated the return of the Finnish delegation from Moscow to obtain further instructions before talks are resumed.

Immediately upon his arrival from Moscow Dr. J. K. Paasikivi, special Finn delegate, will have a discussion with the Finnish cabinet on the Russian proposals. It is expected he will stay here at least a couple of days. President Kallio and Foreign Minister Erkko have arranged to leave for Stockholm Tuesday to partake in the meeting with the Danish, the Norwegian and the Swedish sovereigns Wednesday.

Moscow Expects Return

It is held possible that Paasikivi will remain in the capital until after that meeting, because its decisions may have important bearing on the situation.

[Many persons in Helsinki believe Paasikivi will not return to Moscow, the Associated Press reported. In Moscow, however, he was expected to return in five days.

[Moscow foreign circles said they expected Finland to grant the Soviet certain islands in the Gulf of Finland for naval bases, but reported an impasse on Russia demands for a military alliance and a share in

Norway Puts Soldiers on North Border

Reinforcements Sent To Frontier Adjoining Finland's Boundary

By the Associated Press

Stockholm, Oct. 15.—Norway, troubled by the rapid expansion of Russia's influence in the Baltic, was reported tonight to have ordered reinforcements sent to her northern frontier.

Reports from Oslo, received here as final preparations were being made for the conference Wednesday of the three kings and president of the four northern countries, said the Norwegian reinforcements would be sent tomorrow to the border adjoining Finland.

Norway's neighbor, Sweden, began sending reinforcements to her border last Friday. However, Norway's uppermost border actually is nearer Russia than is Sweden's.

Also vitally important in northern Norway is the seaport of Narvik, a railhead on the North Sea for Swedish iron exports to western markets.

Los Angeles, Oct. 5 (U.P.).—Sixty bombardment Warplanes built for Great Britain were lined up at Southern California airports tonight for a delivery flight to Newark, N. J.

It was reported that the planes were being moved closer to their ultimate destination to expedite shipment if the embargo ban is lifted.

Nazis Down Own Lost Plane, Mistaking It for Berlin Raider

Berlin, Oct. 15.—A single topic dominated conversation in Berlin today: The anti-aircraft artillery fire which was clearly audible throughout the city last night. No air-raid sirens were sounded and the whole occurrence remained a cloudy mystery—although most Berliners seemed convinced that enemy airplanes had succeeded in reaching the German capital.

The explanation issued by a semi-official news agency tonight, however, alleged it was not an enemy attack which elicited the anti-aircraft fire but a German plane which had lost its bearings and flew over the closed area around Berlin.

Beneath heavy cloud banks, it was alleged, the ground crews of anti-aircraft batteries were unable to identify the plane and so they opened fire. The airplane, it was stated, was destroyed but the pilot succeeded in landing safely with his parachute.

The radio of the German machine, it was said, had gotten out of order while the pilot was heading for a

No Hardship Seen in Labor Standard Shift

Transition to Be Less Disjointing This Year, Official Asserts

By the Associated Press

Wage-hour officials predicted yesterday that American business would make the October 24 transition to new labor standards with much less confusion than accompanied changes a year ago when the act became operative.

Whereas last year there were hundreds of thousands of inquiries concerning operation of the new law, the correspondence this year is numbered in mere thousands, it was said.

"Now that the law has been in effect one year," one official explained, "most people know about it and it will be a lot less disjointing to the industrial machine."

On October 24, the 25-cent an hour minimum wage allowed under the Federal law rises to 30 cents and the maximum work week decreases from 44 to 42 hours.

Ostober 24 is in the middle of a week and Elmer F. Andrews, administrator, has ruled that wages should be changed at midnight, October 23, while the hour provisions must become effective for the first full work week after October 24.

There has been every evidence, officials said, that American business men generally will comply with the law's provisions promptly.

As one official put it, "The chiselers who think they can get away with it would try whether the minimum was 15 cents, 25 or 30."

For protection against such wilful violations, the wage-hour division now has 250 employes in the field and will increase the number to 500 by spring. Up until June 30, the field staff never had numbered more than 106.

As the new standards become effective, a check of enforcement for the act's first year reveals that 22,000 complaints have been made, chiefly by employes, relatives of employes and competing employers. Preliminary inquiries indicated about 11,000 violations and of these about 5,600 have been sent to the field for further investigation. Others are being analyzed and sent to the field as fast as they can be studied here.

Reports from the field indicate that many of violations were not wilful and employers already have made restitution to employes. Andrews has taken the position that there was no purpose in going to court if a violation was not wilful and a settlement could be obtained.

In 28 criminal cases already tried out of 46 filed, there have been 28 pleas of guilty and fines paid totaling $80,850. Thirty-eight of 44 applications for civil injunctions have been granted.

33 in Congress Oppose Treaty With Argentina

Trade Pact Hearing Today Opens Drive To Get Nazi Markets

By the United Press.

Hearings on a proposed trade agreement with Argentina, expected to be the spearhead of a drive to capture German markets in Latin-America, will open here today with 33 Congressmen scheduled to appear in opposition.

The Administration has indicated it will make every effort for a pact which would strengthen the Roosevelt good neighbor policy and increase the prestige of the United States.

Argentina has been tradionally independent toward United States leadership in the Western Hemisphere. A trade agreement, it is believed here, would be an important development in the relations between the two richest nations in the Pan-American Union.

In addition to political considerations, the United States has its eye on a $50,000,000 market Germany is forfeiting due to the British blockade.

Import Increase Needed

Administration economists have emphasized that if an agreement is reached, the United States will be required to increase its imports from Argentina, chief of which are wool, hides, flaxseed, canned meat and casein.

Although Argentina is the richest nation of Latin America, with the biggest navy, the best credit and the least unemployment, recent economic difficulties have forced it to adopt stringent exchange control and to place restrictions on imports from the United States of such "luxury" items as automobiles and typewriters.

Congressmen from farm areas have indicated they will oppose concessions on Argentine farm exports that compete with United States products.

O'Mahoney an Opponent

Senators O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming; Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado; McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada; Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, are among the legislators who will appear before the committee on reciprocity information, composed of representatives from various Government departments, at the hearings. On the basis of representations made at the hearings, the committee will make recommendations to the State Department.

State Department officials feel that if United States farm interests can be prevailed upon to accept the Argentine agreement, the entire reciprocal trade program will have been given an impressive boost.

Court to Rule Today on Oil, Milk Cases

Antitrust Decisions Expected; D. C. Medical Fight May Be Decided

By the Associated Press

The Supreme Court is expected to announce today whether it will pass on anti-trust cases brought by the Government against Midwestern oil companies and Chicago milk dealers.

These cases are among the major ones filed by the Justice Department in its anti-trust campaign. Decisions adverse to the Government were delivered by lower courts.

The Seventh Federal Circuit Court set aside the conviction of 12 oil companies and five of their officers or employes on a charge of conspiring to raise the price of gasoline sold in 10 Midwestern States in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

New Trial Ordered

A new trial for the defendants was ordered. They had been convicted in the Federal District Court at Madison, Wis.

In the other case, the Northern Illinois Federal District Court dismissed the anti-trust proceedings charging 37 individuals, corporations and organizations with conspiracy to fix milk prices, control the supply and suppress competition in the Chicago area.

It held that Congress had removed the marketing of farm products from the jurisdiction of the Sherman act and had lodged control with the Secretary of Agriculture. Hence, the court ruled, the Sherman act did not apply to the milk case.

The circuit court's action in the oil case was based on a finding that the trial judge had given erroneous instructions to the jury.

Another antitrust case, charging interference by the American Medical Association with Group Health Association in the District of Columbia, is pending before the high tribunal.

The court may announce next Monday whether it will review the controversy. The Government lost in the District of Columbia Federal Court.

Labor Case Up

In addition to the antitrust litigation, announcement is expected today as to whether the tribunal will pass on a decision denying the Amalgamated Utility Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, the right to press a charge of contempt against the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York for alleged violation of a National Labor Relations Board order.

The Federal Circuit Court at New York ruled that the Labor Board was the proper party to prosecute such charges, if any contempt had been committed.

Amalgamated charged Consolidated Edison had coerced its employes into joining the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

HOLC Forces Cancellation of Secret Mortgages

By the Associated Press

The Home Owners Loan Corporation said yesterday that $2,219,000 in "hidden second mortgages" forced on HOLC borrowers by outside interests had been canceled and nearly $500,000 in cash given back to the borrowers.

Harold Lee, general counsel of the agency, said investigation had disclosed a practice under which mortgage holders agreed to dismiss all claims against properties in return for payments made in HOLC bonds, but secretly and under the threat of foreclosure had forced home owners to sign agreements to pay off additional sums without the knowledge of the HOLC.

The HOLC, Lee said, was pressing the drive against such practices on the basis of 119 favorable decisions handed down by six State supreme courts.

The Federal Diary:

Imaginary Federal Agency To Purge Old Demon Graft

Harold Smith (left), of the Budget Bureau; John M. Carmody (center), Federal works administrator, and Cyril Upham (right), first deputy comptroller of the currency, will serve on the board of the fictitious Urban Security Administration, "guinea pig agency," in the discussion Wednesday night

By Alfred Friendly

The most fascinating Governmental agency since the Roman College of Augurs faces drastic reorganization Wednesday night.

In its existence of little more than a year, the organization has been headed by many of the New Deal's most prominent administrators, but none of them has stuck to his job for more than an evening or two.

It has spent $6,000,000 without costing the taxpayers a dime.

A Federal Guinea Pig

It was established under incredibly ideal conditions, yet it is now heir to every ill that besets Federal establishments.

Its functions are the most laudable in the world, but its name would not be recognized by one person in 100,000.

The agency is the Urban Security Administration, a completely fictitious, nonexistent administrative guinea pig for the Washington branch of the sober-sided Society for the Advancement of Management.

The history of the "USA" began when members of the society found Federal officials reluctant to talk about administrative problems—the life-blood of the S. A. M.—for fear their remarks would be taken as pertaining to their own agencies. To meet the problem the members thought up their Alice in Wonderland agency, "created by Congress for the purpose of restoring prosperity to the cities, towns and villages of the United States, and for the creation of improved conditions of health and happiness of their population."

An "appropriation" of $5,000,000 was quickly secured. Jacob Baker, now head of the United Federal Workers and in his day the christener of the defunct Civil Works Administration, thought up its name. Organization plans were begun immediately.

The USA got off to a bad start. At the first meeting of its board last year, its chairman, F. A. Silcox (chief of the Forest Service when not guiding the destinies of the USA), recommended that the board be abolished as a cumbersome, inefficient anachronism and in its place be substituted a modern, one-man administrator.

Although the merit of the proposal was unanimously conceded, Silcox's motion was defeated on the grounds that the speakers at each meeting of the society are the USA board, and for a successful discussion at least three to five speakers are necessary.

Silcox a Stormy Petrel

At the next meeting, where the question of obtaining adequate personnel was debated, the USA began a furious controversy with the Civil Service Commission. Silcox, still the stormy petrel, declared the commission was useless when administrative and top technical personnel was needed. Outraged commission officers thundered denials.

At subsequent meetings, USA affairs settled down. A legal staff was hired, largely to protect the agency from the legal staffs of other Government establishments. The place of a research division was determined. Budget problems were analyzed, functions of line and staff divisions argued out, decentralization of responsibility to field divisions studied.

Ah, Fair Galatea!

Finally the USA was set up under such ideal administrative principles and perfect organizational devices that even the gifted members of the S. A. M. were amazed at the beauty of their Galatea.

But, as in all such cases, perfection was found to be a bore, so the administrative officers of the USA, still happily working in a vacuum crowded by figments of their imagination, have decided that for the coming year, their superlative agency shall be in a ghastly condition.

It has, they decided, spent $1,000,000 more than it should, and consequently must seek a deficiency appropriation. Employe unions, they hold, have become almost as troublesome as a Congressional investigating committee, whose hot breath is close on the USA's neck. The publicity program has gone askew. Other agencies are complaining that the USA is interfering, overlapping, infringing. The specter of elections, politics, patronage and graft is rearing its Hydra-head. The situation couldn't be worse.

Reorganization on the Way

First step, therefore, is reorganization, a problem to be faced at a dinner meeting Wednesday in the Y. W. C. A. Barker Hall. The board for the evening will be John M. Carmody, at other times head of the Federal Works Agency; Harold Smith, usually thought of as director of the Budget Bureau, and Cyril Upham, whom Secretary Morgenthau confidently believes to be his first deputy Comptroller of the Currency.

Some others who have taken time off from their usual jobs to run the destinies of the USA are R. Gordon Wagenet, director of the Social Security Board unemployment bureau; Roy F. Hendrickson and Robert C. Smith, personnel directors of the Agriculture and Labor Departments, respectively; James Bennett, Bureau of Prisons director; F. F. Hill, governor of the Farm Credit Administration; Oscar M. Powell, executive director of the Social Security Board; Murray W. Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board; Stuart A. Rice, chairman of the Central Statistical Board, and W. A. Jump, budget officer for the Department of Agriculture.

Quite seriously, the S. A. M. finds the USA an invaluable invention for obtaining discussion of administrative problems common to all Government offices. Solutions reached for imaginary problems have been carried over to real ones.

Roosevelt To Open Exile Parley Today

Conference to Study Problem of 150,000 German Refugees

By International News Service

President Roosevelt today will open a meeting of the International Conference of Refugees, with a message on the vexing problem of aiding Germany's 150,000 political exiles.

Members of the executive committee of the conference which he sponsored will lunch with the President at the White House to receive his observations, and then begin a series of meetings in the State Department Building.

Originally formed to assist political refugees from Germany, the conference is now faced with proposals that it extend its assistance to refugees from Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and other countries more recently victims of new governmental orders.

Those to attend the sessions convening today include Lord Winterton, chairman of the Inter-Governmental Committee for Political Refugees; Paul Van Zeeland, former Premier of Belgium, and Herbert Emerson, director of the committee.

About 50,000 German exiles are distributed in Holland, Belgium and Switzerland, 40,000 in Great Britain and about 50,000 in France.

The exodus of political victims from Germany has stopped, it was said. Germany was represented as being willing to permit elderly Jewish men and women to leave but not young men and women desired for war work.

Germany's quota for emigration to the United States has been exhausted, though there were suggestions that the Philippine Island of Mindinao be made a permanent haven for persecuted German minorities.

With Great Britain and France absorbed by war problems, the fate of political exiles was believed to depend chiefly upon neutral nations.

Myron C. Taylor Gets Medal for Refugee Work

New York, Oct. 15.—The 1939 medal for the promotion of better understanding between Chritsian and Jew inAmerica was awarded today to Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the United States Steel Corporation and American representative on the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.

A committee of 60 eminent Americans of the Jewish, Catholic and Protestant faiths chose Taylor from a list of candidates submitted. The medal was awarded to President Roosevelt last year, to Arturo Toscanini the year before and to Mayor LaGuardia in 1936.

The award was accompanied by the following citation: "Because of his completely unselfish effort to find havens for Christian and Jewish refugees from Nazi persecution and because this effort so dramatized the value of Christian-Jewish cooperation that a greater bond was created between Chritsian and Jew in America."

Soda Clerk Tells Of Drowning 5-Year-Old Son

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—Lawrence Rougeau, 26, unemployed soda clerk, wandered New York's chill streets aimlessly for two hours early today, then approached Patrolman Walter Cicack and said:

"I have drowned my boy."

The boy was his 5-year-old stepson, James.

Cicack took Rougeau to a police station where, Jacob Rosenblum, head of the homicide bureau of the district attorney's office, said, he told this story:

Early today, while the boy's mother was absent from their East Twelfth street apartment, James moaned in his sleep, as he often did. The father bound James' hands and feet, gagged him with neckties put him in a tubful of water and left him five minutes.

Then the water was let out of the tub and Rougeau left the apartment to walk until he met Cicack.

Woman Suicide Leaves 'Ghost to Haunt Suitor'

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—A 25-year-old woman died in a nine-story plunge at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel today, leaving her "ghost" to chase a man whom she said had "hounded" her because of her refusal to marry him.

The woman, who registered a month ago as Lilian Poccardi, left eight notes, police said, indicating she had planned to take her life. The notes accused a policeman of molesting her after she refused him in 1935.

New York, Oct. 25 (INS).—President Roosevelt has assured the New York World's Fair that he would recommend to Congress in January that sufficient funds be appropriated to do the Federal Government's part next year to assure reopening of the Federal Building at the fair, it was announced tonight.

This assurance came in the form of a letter from the President's secretary, Edwin M. Watson. The communication said the President feels that the Government should go along with the action of the World's Fair authorities to reopen for a second season in 1940.

Hobbyists Who Use Spare Hours For Handiwork to Plan Exhibit

Christmas Toy Repair Project Is Next on Schedule of Group to Meet Tomorrow Night at Home of Secretary, W. H. Galbraith

That assorted group of hobbyists who are banded into the Capital Homecraft Club will meet tomorrow night to talk over wookworking as a spare time pursuit.

Lawyers, a machinst, a theater projection man, business men, Government workers, are included in the membership of about 30. Some make furniture; others turn out novelties and toys, Galbraith said. Some will bring out a sample of their latest experimentation to show.

Galbraith, chief of the mails and files section of the Federal Trade Commission, specializes in inlay work. Puffing on his pipe, he pointed out some of the satisfactions which keep a man at a workbench after office hours: "To make something with your own hands, something different from what you would buy."

And he added, "sometimes at the bench or the lathe, you turn over thoughts that might be called philosopthical, I guess."

Auto Salesman Beaten, Left for Dead by Prospect

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—A Long Island City auto salesman, demonstrating a car to a prospective customer, was slugged, hurled down a flight of stairs, trussed up in a trunk and left for dead in a Queens backyard last night.

Police, summoned by a mysterious telephone call that they would find "a dead man" there, found the salesman—Harry B. McGill, 55—unconscious. His skull was fractured.

Assistant District Attorney John Krogman announced that a 20-year-old button machine operator, Francis Humel, 20, unemployed for two weeks, had been taken into custody and had admitted committing the assault because he found he did not have $430 with which to buy the car.

Mission Moneys Reduced by War

New York, Oct. 15.—The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, today notified American Catholics that the war would eliminate the contributions to the church's world-wide missions from a number of countries that usually give them "firm support," and appealed that the Catholics of this country accordingly give "particular attention" to the collection for the missions this year.

A Nation-wide one-day collection for the Catholic missions will be taken up at the mases in all Catholic churches in the country next Sunday. Archbishop Cicognani outlined it in a letter made public by the Right Rev. Thomas J. Donnell, national director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Syphilis Clinics Nearly Tripled In Nine Years

Number Treated Increased 5-Fold, Health Parley Told

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Oct. 15.—An increase of almost 300 per cent in the number of clinics treating patients for syphilis was reported today before the American Public Health Association.

The anti-syphilis campaign begun three years ago has been very effective, Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr of the U. S. Public Health Service, Washington, told a community mass meeting her preceding the formal opening of the association's annual meeting.

2,405 Clinics Active

"The number of clinics treating patients for syphilis during the year 1939 totals 2,405 to date," he declared, "which is an increase of 287 per cent over 1930. During the present year 659 more clinics reported to the Public Health Service than during 1938."

Almost five times as many blood tests for syphilis were made this year as in 1930, he added. In 1930 only 1,632,063 persons were tested, while this year 5,588,285 already have been reported.

In addition, the tests are more accurate in detecting the disease, Dr. Vonderlehr added, because the Public Health Service, in allotting Federal funds for State and in the control of all diseases, has established new high standards of examination and technique in tracing down the potential "individual epidemics" of syphilis and gonorrhea.

Public interest has also been aroused to the health benefits of fighting gonorrhea, he declared, and in the last year 605,631 laboratory tests were made.

Free Treatment Available

Under the venereal disease control act of 1938, the drugs used to treat syphilis are made available to physicians, without cost if the patient is unable to afford treatment, and the program of disease eradication thus jumps across the boundary of economic inability to pay for treatment, Dr. Vonderlehr declared.

The result is that thousands of cases which would have gone untreated "and left a trail of death and misery behind them" are now being given adequate treatment and epidemics are being stopped before they start, he added.

Cancer Clinics Approved

Philadelphia, Oct. 15 (AP).—The American College of Surgeons announced here tonight it has approved 307 cancer clinics in general hospitals in the United States and Canada.

These clinics blanket the United States, expect for seven States. There are 22 in Canada. "Approval" means that the college, the leading surgical organization in the Western Hemisphere, has found them equipped to give the latest and best service in cancer.

The college tonight also issued its latest figures in cancer cures, giving 30,000 persons alive five years later being treated with surgery, radium or X-rays.

Chrysler Plant Strike Ballot Called by UAW

Unions Claim Support Of Workers; 50,000 Idle in Deadlock

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 15.—The possibility of an early solution to Chrysler Corporation's ten-day deadlock with the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers Union appeared remote today as union locals voted on a leadership request for permission to call a strike.

On the eve of resumption of peace parleys, locals representing the Chrysler plants in Detroit neared completion of a week-end strike ballot climaxing a dispute which already has left more than 50,000 auto workers idle.

Leaders of the C. I. O.-U. A. W. claimed full support from the rank and file and continued adamant in two major demands which the corporation previously rejected

Union Shop Asked

These were a union shop and a union share in decisions on factory production speeds, the original bone of contention in the present stalemate.

R. J. Thomas, president of the U. A. W.-C. I. O., wrote K. T. Keller, Chrysler president, that the union must have the "power" derived from a union shop "if it is to fully shoulder its responsibilities."

Thomas also disclosed that the union, in resuming contract negotiations, would seek, among other objectives, a general wage increase of 10 cents an hour, two weeks vacation with pay for workers with more than one year seniority, and the corporation's purchase of union-made parts wherever possible.

Increase Held Justified

"To keep pace with increased living costs," Thomas said, "we are proposing a blanket 10-cent wage increase for all workers. Chrysler profits, which were more than $25,000,000 for the first six months of this year, as well as the needs of the workers, make such an increase justifiable and necessary."

The corporation announced it was ready to open its plants "as usual" tomorrow morning.

"We will resume operations, as we have done every morning since the dispute began," said R. W. Conder, director of Chrysler labor relations, "but we will not be able to operate if the union curtails production by continuing its slow-down strike."

No Hardship Seen in Labor Standard Shift

By the Associated Press

Wage-hour officials predicted yesterday that American business would make the October 24 transition to new labor standards with much less confusion than accompanied changes a year ago when the act became operative.

Whereas last year there were hundreds of thousands of inquiries concerning operation of the new law, the correspondence this year is numbered in mere thousands, it was said.

"Now that the law has been in effect one year," one official explained, "most people know about it and it will be a lot less disjointing to the industrial machine."

On October 24, the 25-cent an hour minimum wage allowed under the Federal law rises to 30 cents and the maximum work week decreases from 44 to 42 hours.

Ostober 24 is in the middle of a week and Elmer F. Andrews, administrator, has ruled that wages should be changed at midnight, October 23, while the hour provisions must become effective for the first full work week after October 24.

There has been every evidence, officials said, that American business men generally will comply with the law's provisions promptly.

As one official put it, "The chiselers who think they can get away with it would try whether the minimum was 15 cents, 25 or 30."

For protection against such wilful violations, the wage-hour division now has 250 employes in the field and will increase the number to 500 by spring. Up until June 30, the field staff never had numbered more than 106.

As the new standards become effective, a check of enforcement for the act's first year reveals that 22,000 complaints have been made, chiefly by employes, relatives of employes and competing employers. Preliminary inquiries indicated about 11,000 violations and of these about 5,600 have been sent to the field for further investigation. Others are being analyzed and sent to the field as fast as they can be studied here.

Reports from the field indicate that many of violations were not wilful and employers already have made restitution to employes. Andrews has taken the position that there was no purpose in going to court if a violation was not wilful and a settlement could be obtained.

In 28 criminal cases already tried out of 46 filed, there have been 28 pleas of guilty and fines paid totaling $80,850. Thirty-eight of 44 applications for civil injunctions have been granted.

33 in Congress Oppose Treaty With Argentina

Trade Pact Hearing Today Opens Drive To Get Nazi Markets

By the United Press.

Hearings on a proposed trade agreement with Argentina, expected to be the spearhead of a drive to capture German markets in Latin-America, will open here today with 33 Congressmen scheduled to appear in opposition.

The Administration has indicated it will make every effort for a pact which would strengthen the Roosevelt good neighbor policy and increase the prestige of the United States.

Argentina has been tradionally independent toward United States leadership in the Western Hemisphere. A trade agreement, it is believed here, would be an important development in the relations between the two richest nations in the Pan-American Union.

In addition to political considerations, the United States has its eye on a $50,000,000 market Germany is forfeiting due to the British blockade.

Import Increase Needed

Administration economists have emphasized that if an agreement is reached, the United States will be required to increase its imports from Argentina, chief of which are wool, hides, flaxseed, canned meat and casein.

Although Argentina is the richest nation of Latin America, with the biggest navy, the best credit and the least unemployment, recent economic difficulties have forced it to adopt stringent exchange control and to place restrictions on imports from the United States of such "luxury" items as automobiles and typewriters.

Congressmen from farm areas have indicated they will oppose concessions on Argentine farm exports that compete with United States products.

O'Mahoney an Opponent

Senators O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming; Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado; McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada; Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, are among the legislators who will appear before the committee on reciprocity information, composed of representatives from various Government departments, at the hearings. On the basis of representations made at the hearings, the committee will make recommendations to the State Department.

State Department officials feel that if United States farm interests can be prevailed upon to accept the Argentine agreement, the entire reciprocal trade program will have been given an impressive boost.

Harry Bridges C. I. O. District Is Abolished

San Francisco, Oct. 15 (AP).—In a new administrative set-up, Nation-wide in scope, the executive committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations yesterday abolished the West Coast district, headed by Harry Bridges, and said to have been the only district of comparable size in the United States. Bridges was named California director.

John L. Lewis, president of the C. I. O., declared: "It would be erroneous to interpret the action as a demotion for Bridges."

Allen S. Haywood, who was regional director in New York, was appointed director of organization, with offices in Washington.

Court to Rule Today on Oil, Milk Cases

Antitrust Decisions Expected; D. C. Medical Fight May Be Decided

By the Associated Press

The Supreme Court is expected to announce today whether it will pass on anti-trust cases brought by the Government against Midwestern oil companies and Chicago milk dealers.

These cases are among the major ones filed by the Justice Department in its anti-trust campaign. Decisions adverse to the Government were delivered by lower courts.

The Seventh Federal Circuit Court set aside the conviction of 12 oil companies and five of their officers or employes on a charge of conspiring to raise the price of gasoline sold in 10 Midwestern States in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

New Trial Ordered

A new trial for the defendants was ordered. They had been convicted in the Federal District Court at Madison, Wis.

In the other case, the Northern Illinois Federal District Court dismissed the anti-trust proceedings charging 57 individuals, corporations and organizations with conspiracy to fix milk prices, control the supply and suppress competition in the Chicago area.

It held that Congress had removed the marketing of farm products from the jurisdiction of the Sherman act and had lodged control with the Secretary of Agriculture. Hence, the court ruled, the Sherman act did not apply to the milk case.

The circuit court's action in the oil case was based on a finding that the trial judge had given erroneous instructions to the jury.

Another antitrust case, charging interference by the American Medical Association with Group Health Association in the District of Columbia, is pending before the high tribunal.

The court may announce next Monday whether it will review the controversy. The Government lost in the District of Columbia Federal Court.

Labor Case Up

In addition to the antitrust litigation, announcement is expected today as to whether the tribunal will pass on a decision denying the Amalgamated Utility Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, the right to press a charge of contempt against the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York for alleged violation of a National Labor Relations Board order.

The Federal Circuit Court at New York ruled that the Labor Board was the proper party to prosecute such charges, if any contempt had been committed.

Amalgamated charged Consolidated Edison had coerced its employes into joining the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

HOLC Forces Cancellation of Secret Mortgages

By the Associated Press

The Home Owners Loan Corporation said yesterday that $2,219,000 in "hidden second mortgages" forced on HOLC borrowers by outside interests had been canceled and nearly $500,000 in cash given back to the borrowers.

Harold Lee, general counsel of the agency, said investigation had disclosed a practice under which mortgage holders agreed to dismiss all claims against properties in return for payments made in HOLC bonds, but secretly and under the threat of foreclosure had forced home owners to sign agreements to pay off additional sums without the knowledge of the HOLC.

The HOLC, Lee said, was pressing the drive against such practices on the basis of 119 favorable decisions handed down by six State supreme courts.

The Federal Diary:

Imaginary Federal Agency To Purge Old Demon Graft

Harold Smith (left), of the Budget Bureau; John M. Carmody (center), Federal works administrator, and Cyril Upham (right), first deputy comptroller of the currency, will serve on the board of the fictitious Urban Security Administration, "guinea pig agency," in the discussion Wednesday night

By Alfred Friendly

The most fascinating Governmental agency since the Roman College of Augurs faces drastic reorganization Wednesday night.

In its existence of little more than a year, the organization has been headed by many of the New Deal's most prominent administrators, but none of them has stuck to his job for more than an evening or two.

It has spent $6,000,000 without costing the taxpayers a dime.

A Federal Guinea Pig

It was established under incredibly ideal conditions, yet it is now heir to every ill that besets Federal establishments.

Its functions are the most laudable in the world, but its name would not be recognized by one person in 100,000.

The agency is the Urban Security Administration, a completely fictitious, nonexistent administrative guinea pig for the Washington branch of the sober-sided Society for the Advancement of Management.

The history of the "USA" began when members of the society found Federal officials reluctant to talk about administrative problems—the life-blood of the S. A. M.—for fear their remarks would be taken as pertaining to their own agencies. To meet the problem the members thought up their Alice in Wonderland agency, "created by Congress for the purpose of restoring prosperity to the cities, towns and villages of the United States, and for the creation of improved conditions of health and happiness of their population."

An "appropriation" of $5,000,000 was quickly secured. Jacob Baker, now head of the United Federal Workers and in his day the christener of the defunct Civil Works Administration, thought up its name. Organization plans were begun immediately.

The USA got off to a bad start. At the first meeting of its board last year, its chairman, F. A. Silcox (chief of the Forest Service when not guiding the destinies of the USA), recommended that the board be abolished as a cumbersome, inefficient anachronism and in its place be substituted a modern, one-man administrator.

Although the merit of the proposal was unanimously conceded, Silcox's motion was defeated on the grounds that the speakers at each meeting of the society are the USA board, and for a successful discussion at least three to five speakers are necessary.

Silcox a Stormy Petrel

At the next meeting, where the question of obtaining adequate personnel was debated, the USA began a furious controversy with the Civil Service Commission. Silcox, still the stormy petrel, declared the commission was useless when administrative and top technical personnel was needed. Outraged commission officers thundered denials.

At subsequent meetings, USA affairs settled down. A legal staff was hired, largely to protect the agency from the legal staffs of other Government establishments. The place of a research division was determined. Budget problems were analyzed, functions of line and staff divisions argued out, decentralization of responsibility to field divisions studied.

Ah, Fair Galatea!

Finally the USA was set up under such ideal administrative principles and perfect organizational devices that even the gifted members of the S. A. M. were amazed at the beauty of their Galatea.

But, as in all such cases, perfection was found to be a bore, so the administrative officers of the USA, still happily working in a vacuum crowded by figments of their imagination, have decided that for the coming year, their superlative agency shall be in a ghastly condition.

It has, they decided, spent $1,000,000 more than it should, and consequently must seek a deficiency appropriation. Employe unions, they hold, have become almost as troublesome as a Congressional investigating committee, whose hot breath is close on the USA's neck. The publicity program has gone askew. Other agencies are complaining that the USA is interfering, overlapping, infringing. The specter of elections, politics, patronage and graft is rearing its Hydra-head. The situation couldn't be worse.

Reorganization on the Way

First step, therefore, is reorganization, a problem to be faced at a dinner meeting Wednesday in the Y. W. C. A. Barker Hall. The board for the evening will be John M. Carmody, at other times head of the Federal Works Agency; Harold Smith, usually thought of as director of the Budget Bureau, and Cyril Upham, whom Secretary Morgenthau confidently believes to be his first deputy Comptroller of the Currency.

Some others who have taken time off from their usual jobs to run the destinies of the USA are R. Gordon Wagenet, director of the Social Security Board unemployment bureau; Roy F. Hendrickson and Robert C. Smith, personnel directors of the Agriculture and Labor Departments, respectively; James Bennett, Bureau of Prisons director; F. F. Hill, governor of the Farm Credit Administration; Oscar M. Powell, executive director of the Social Security Board; Murray W. Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board; Stuart A. Rice, chairman of the Central Statistical Board, and W. A. Jump, budget officer for the Department of Agriculture.

Quite seriously, the S. A. M. finds the USA an invaluable invention for obtaining discussion of administrative problems common to all Government offices. Solutions reached for imaginary problems have been carried over to real ones.

Roosevelt To Open Exile Parley Today

Conference to Study Problem of 150,000 German Refugees

By International News Service

President Roosevelt today will open a meeting of the International Conference of Refugees, with a message on the vexing problem of aiding Germany's 150,000 political exiles.

Members of the executive committee of the conference which he sponsored will lunch with the President at the White House to receive his observations, and then begin a series of meetings in the State Department Building.

Originally formed to assist political refugees from Germany, the conference is now faced with proposals that it extend its assistance to refugees from Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and other countries more recently victims of new governmental orders.

Those to attend the sessions convening today include Lord Winterton, chairman of the Inter-Governmental Committee for Political Refugees; Paul Van Zeeland, former Premier of Belgium, and Herbert Emerson, director of the committee.

About 50,000 German exiles are distributed in Holland, Belgium and Switzerland, 40,000 in Great Britain and about 50,000 in France.

The exodus of political victims from Germany has stopped, it was said. Germany was represented as being willing to permit elderly Jewish men and women to leave but not young men and women desired for war work.

Germany's quota for emigration to the United States has been exhausted, though there were suggestions that the Philippine Island of Mindinao be made a permanent haven for persecuted German minorities.

With Great Britain and France absorbed by war problems, the fate of political exiles was believed to depend chiefly upon neutral nations.

Myron C. Taylor Gets Medal for Refugee Work

New York, Oct. 15.—The 1939 medal for the promotion of better understanding between Chritsian and Jew inAmerica was awarded today to Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the United States Steel Corporation and American representative on the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.

A committee of 60 eminent Americans of the Jewish, Catholic and Protestant faiths chose Taylor from a list of candidates submitted. The medal was awarded to President Roosevelt last year, to Arturo Toscanini the year before and to Mayor LaGuardia in 1936.

The award was accompanied by the following citation: "Because of his completely unselfish effort to find havens for Christian and Jewish refugees from Nazi persecution and because this effort so dramatized the value of Christian-Jewish cooperation that a greater bond was created between Chritsian and Jew in America."

Soda Clerk Tells Of Drowning 5-Year-Old Son

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—Lawrence Rougeau, 26, unemployed soda clerk, wandered New York's chill streets aimlessly for two hours early today, then approached Patrolman Walter Cicack and said:

"I have drowned my boy."

The boy was his 5-year-old stepson, James.

Cicack took Rougeau to a police station where, Jacob Rosenblum, head of the homicide bureau of the district attorney's office, said, he told this story:

Early today, while the boy's mother was absent from their East Twelfth street apartment, James moaned in his sleep, as he often did. The father bound James' hands and feet, gagged him with neckties put him in a tubful of water and left him five minutes.

Then the water was let out of the tub and Rougeau left the apartment to walk until he met Cicack.

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—A 25-year-old woman died in a nine-story plunge at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel today, leaving her "ghost" to chase a man whom she said had "hounded" her because of her refusal to marry him.

The woman, who registered a month ago as Lilian Poccardi, left eight notes, police said, indicating she had planned to take her life. The notes accused a policeman of molesting her after she refused him in 1935.

Hobbyists Who Use Spare Hours For Handiwork to Plan Exhibit

Christmas Toy Repair Project Is Next on Schedule of Group to Meet Tomorrow Night at Home of Secretary, W. H. Galbraith

That assorted group of hobbyists who are banded into the Capital Homecraft Club will meet tomorrow night to talk over wookworking as a spare time pursuit.

They will gather at the home of the secretary, William Howard Galbraith, 3408 Tenth street northeast, to discuss their Christmas toy repair project for needy children and their next exhibit of members' handiwork.

Lawyers, a machinst, a theater projection man, business men, Government workers, are included in the membership of about 30. Some make furniture; others turn out novelties and toys, Galbraith said. Some will bring out a sample of their latest experimentation to show.

Galbraith, chief of the mails and files section of the Federal Trade Commission, specializes in inlay work. Puffing on his pipe, he pointed out some of the satisfactions which keep a man at a workbench after office hours: "To make something with your own hands, something different from what you would buy."

And he added, "sometimes at the bench or the lathe, you turn over thoughts that might be called philosopthical, I guess."

Auto Salesman Beaten, Left for Dead by Prospect

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—A Long Island City auto salesman, demonstrating a car to a prospective customer, was slugged, hurled down a flight of stairs, trussed up in a trunk and left for dead in a Queens backyard last night.

Police, summoned by a mysterious telephone call that they would find "a dead man" there, found the salesman—Harry B. McGill, 55—unconscious. His skull was fractured.

Assistant District Attorney John Krogman announced that a 20-year-old button machine operator, Francis Humel, 20, unemployed for two weeks, had been taken into custody and had admitted committing the assault because he found he did not have $450 with which to buy the car.

Mission Moneys Reduced by War

New York, Oct. 15.—The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, today notified American Catholics that the war would eliminate the contributions to the church's world-wide missions from a number of countries that usually give them "firm support," and appealed that the Catholics of this country accordingly give "particular attention" to the collection for the missions this year.

A Nation-wide one-day collection for the Catholic missions will be taken up at the mases in all Catholic churches in the country next Sunday. Archbishop Cicognani outlined it in a letter made public by the Right Rev. Thomas J. Donnell, national director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Syphilis Clinics Nearly Tripled In Nine Years

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Oct. 15.—An increase of almost 300 per cent in the number of clinics treating patients for syphilis was reported today before the American Public Health Association.

The anti-syphilis campaign begun three years ago has been very effective, Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr of the U. S. Public Health Service, Washington, told a community mass meeting her preceding the formal opening of the association's annual meeting.

2,405 Clinics Active

"The number of clinics treating patients for syphilis during the year 1939 totals 2,405 to date," he declared, "which is an increase of 287 per cent over 1930. During the present year 659 more clinics reported to the Public Health Service than during 1938."

Almost five times as many blood tests for syphilis were made this year as in 1930, he added. In 1930 only 1,632,063 persons were tested, while this year 5,588,285 already have been reported.

In addition, the tests are more accurate in detecting the disease, Dr. Vonderlehr added, because the Public Health Service, in allotting Federal funds for State and in the control of all diseases, has established new high standards of examination and technique in tracing down the potential "individual epidemics" of syphilis and gonorrhea.

Public interest has also been aroused to the health benefits of fighting gonorrhea, he declared, and in the last year 605,631 laboratory tests were made.

Free Treatment Available

Under the venereal disease control act of 1938, the drugs used to treat syphilis are made available to physicians, without cost if the patient is unable to afford treatment, and the program of disease eradication thus jumps across the boundary of economic inability to pay for treatment, Dr. Vonderlehr declared.

The result is that thousands of cases which would have gone untreated "and left a trail of death and misery behind them" are now being given adequate treatment and epidemics are being stopped before they start, he added.

Cancer Clinics Approved

Philadelphia, Oct. 15 (AP).—The American College of Surgeons announced here tonight it has approved 307 cancer clinics in general hospitals in the United States and Canada.

These clinics blanket the United States, expect for seven States. There are 22 in Canada. "Approval" means that the college, the leading surgical organization in the Western Hemisphere, has found them equipped to give the latest and best service in cancer.

The college tonight also issued its latest figures in cancer cures, giving 30,000 persons alive five years later being treated with surgery, radium or X-rays.

Chrysler Plant Strike Ballot Called by UAW

Unions Claim Support Of Workers; 50,000 Idle in Deadlock

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 15.—The possibility of an early solution to Chrysler Corporation's ten-day deadlock with the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers Union appeared remote today as union locals voted on a leadership request for permission to call a strike.

On the eve of resumption of peace parleys, locals representing the Chrysler plants in Detroit neared completion of a week-end strike ballot climaxing a dispute which already has left more than 50,000 auto workers idle.

Leaders of the C. I. O.-U. A. W. claimed full support from the rank and file and continued adamant in two major demands which the corporation previously rejected

Union Shop Asked

These were a union shop and a union share in decisions on factory production speeds, the original bone of contention in the present stalemate.

R. J. Thomas, president of the U. A. W.-C. I. O., wrote K. T. Keller, Chrysler president, that the union must have the "power" derived from a union shop "if it is to fully shoulder its responsibilities."

Thomas also disclosed that the union, in resuming cogtract negotiations, would seek, among other objectives, a general wage increase of 10 cents an hour, two weeks vacation with pay for workers with more than one year seniority, and the corporation's purchase of union-made parts wherever possible.

Increase Held Justified

"To keep pace with increased living costs," Thomas said, "we are proposing a blanket 10-cent wage increase for all workers. Chrysler profits, which were more than $25,000,000 for the first six months of this year, as well as the needs of the workers, make such an increase justifiable and necessary."

The corporation announced it was ready to open its plants "as usual" tomorrow morning.

"We will resume operations, as we have done every morning since the dispute began," said R. W. Conder, director of Chrysler labor relations, "but we will not be able to operate if the union curtails production by continuing its slow-down strike."

control of the strategic Aaland Islands.—Editor's note.]

The Finnish government stubbornly refuses to comment on rumors abroad about Soviet proposals except to say that they do not entirely correspond with the facts.

Well-informed political quarters picture about the Aaland Islands are paying special attention to conand a military alliance. There is a feeling these questions are most difficult as they involve the whole structure of Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland.

No Chances Taken

chances and if Helsinkis is threatened, the government probably will

The government is taking no move north.

Meanwhile, many army officers took quarters in hotels. Soldiers bearing rifles appeared in streets in increasing numbers. All strategic bridges and buildings were guarded.

Reserves in Helsinki and this district were being mustered and many restaurants were devoting half their space to giving them provisions. The sale of liquor was banned.

Signs are to go up in every Helsinki apartment tomorrow telling what should be done if flight from the city is necessary.

Nearly 10,000 persons already have left the city voluntarily.

"We are preparing for everything," a spokesman said, maintaining, nevertheless, there still was hope of settling Finland's differences with Russia.

Women, Children Leave

Women and children left a strip of Finnish soil north of Leningrad between Lake Lagoda and the Gulf of Finland, going into the interior.

Despite these military preparations, Sulo Solkka, chief of the press bureau of the Olympic Games, said preparations were going ahead for the classic in 1940. He said 47 nations had accepted invitations.

Compromise Expected

Moscow, Oct. 15 (AP).—Most foreign circles here expected a compromise would result from the Finnish-Russian conferences by which Finland would make some concessions but refuse to go the whole way with the Soviet.

There were unofficial reports the Finns were prepared to grant certain islands in the Gulf of Finland to Russia for naval bases, but was obdurate on the question of a military alliance and the Aaland Islands, in which Sweden is interested deeply.

It was considered possible Dr. J. K. Paasikivi, chief of the Finnish delegation might not return until after the conference of the Kings of Sweden, Norway and Denmark and the President of Finland, which opens Wednesday in Stockholm.

The heads of the four states were expected to give an expression of solidarity and desire for neutrality.

Dr. Paasikivi's departure left the diplomatic spotlight concentrated upon the Turkish delegation, headed by Foreign Minister Saracoglu, which was reported to have reached or virtually reached—an agreement on questions concerning the Black Sea and the Dardanelles as well as Turkish-Russian relations in regard to the European war.

The delegation said, however, it had no appointment at the Kremlin tonight.

Josef Stalin was understood to have taken part in conferences yesterday with Dr. Paasikivi and Soviet Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotoff.

Soviet Officials Absent

The Finn, accompanied by the Finnish minister to Moscow, left Moscow at 12:30 a. m. today. The envoys of all the Scandinavian states went to the train to say farewell but there were no Soviet officials.

Meanwhile, in addition to the Turkish delegation, there is a German trade delegation here negotiating for raw materials.

At the same time, since Russia and Hungary have a common frontier because of the partition of Poland, the Russian press has been emphasizing the desire for friendly relations with the Hungarians.

Tass, official news agency, yesterday announced the arrival of a Hungarian mission headed by M. Dekristoffi, but failed to disclose the purpose.

(Failure of Soviet Russia to name a new diplomatic envoy to Hungary, although Dr. Charles Kristoffy, new Hungarian minister, has arrived in Moscow, caused a feeling of uneasiness in Budapest political circles.

(The Hungarian pres has made no mention of the arrival of the Moscow mission, continuing its complete reserve on the restoration of diplomatic relations with the Soviet. This silence was regarded in some circles as possibly due to the fact no Soviet envoy had been named. Hungary's traditional anti-Communist attitude also was taken to be a factor.

(Although Russia closed its Budapest legation shortly after Hungary signed the anti-Comintern pact and Hungary recalled its Moscow minister, neither country went so far as to break off relations.)

Foreign circles speculated upon Russian aims in the Balkans when she had consolidated her new position in the north.

Unofficial German quarters acknowledged that Germany had given up any economic or military rivalry with Russia in the Baltic but there was a widespread belief no such free hand would be given in the Balkans.

One of the great questions for the future, observers contended, would revolve around Rumania, which has oil Germany values and land—Bessarabia—which belonged to Russia before the World War.

Procope Gives Stand

By the Associated Press

Hjalmar J. Procope, Finnish Minister to the United States, said last night his country wanted to maintain friendly relations with Russia and Germany, but "will not give up her vital rights or sign any agreement incompatible with her independence, neutrality and integrity."

Expressing Finland's "great and deep gratitude" to the United States for "moral support and friendship," Procope said in a radio address that his country's "only aim is to live in peace and peaceful cooperation with other nations."

War Worries 3 Kings and President

call for many German ships carrying iron ore southward. Now the British naval patrol virtually has closed this route for the Germans—and at the same time has kept it open for the British.

The program for the coming meeting of chiefs of the four northern countries did not disclose the agenda but indicated the conversations would occupy two days. The conference will open Wednesday morning, attended by the kings of Sweden, Norway and Denmark and Finland's president.

The fact that economic experts would be included indicated trade problems arising from the European conflict would be discussed.

However, Finland's critical situation in the face of Russian demands was believed likely to overshadow all other angles of the conference, which Sweden called last Friday as Finland's delegation journeyed toward Moscow at the Soviet's "bid" for political conversations.

King Gustaf of Sweden will be host to King Haakon, of Norway, King Christian of Denmark and President Kallio, of Finland, at luncheon.

The Swedish foreign minister, Richard Sandler, will have as luncheon guests the foreign ministers of Norway, Finland and Denmark.

U. S. Merchantmen Rescue 400 From 7 Attacked Ships

American merchant vessels have gone to the aid of seven attacked ships, rescuing or helping nearly 400 survivors, since outbreak of the European war, Commander R. S. Field, director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, reported yesterday. He said the rescues have been performed in a manner which reflects great credit on officers and men alike and upon the merchant marine of the United States."

Most important rescue was the transfer of 223 survivors of the British liner Athenia to the S.S. City of Flint from the Danish yacht Southern Cross which had picked them up.

Capt. John Reynolds of the S.S. Collingsworth rescued 55 members of the crew of H. M. S. Courageous, British aircraft carrier. The American Shipper ran 150 miles off course to pick up 32 survivors of the British freighter Blairlogie. The Washington picked up 33 from the British steamer Olive Grove. The American Farmer rescued 29 from the British steamer Kafiristan.

The tanker R. G. Stewart rescued the crew of the British steamer Inverliffey, and the S.S. Scannpenn rescued the crew of the British steamer Firby.

Allied Warships Twice Search Liner Rex

Gen Terauchi and Mrs. Harrison Williams Among Passengers

Copyright by New York Times.

New York, Oct. 15.—The Italian liner Rex arrived today on its second visit since the war with 1,769 passengers, including two such diverse celebrities as Mrs. Harrison Williams, famous as one of the best dressed women in the world, and Gen. Count Juichi Terauchi, who was in command of the Japanese armies in north China until the end of last year.

The ship sailed from Genoa on October 6. The second day out the Rex was stopped by two French destroyers, passengers said, and later that evening was held seven hours by the British at Gibraltar. She had 400 Germans aboard, most of them women and children, but none was taken off.

Sees Hitler and Ciano

The 60-year-old general and former minister of war left Japan in July to attend the Nuremburg Congress of the Nazi party the first week of September on Hitler's invitation.

By the time he got to Italy, after a leisurely trip through the Suez Canal, the congress had been called off. He waited around in Italy for two weeks, met Count Ciano, Italian foreign minister, and then proceeded to Germany.

He arrived in Berlin on September 16 and spent the rest of the month in Germany touring the different fronts in trains, motor cars and planes. He met Fuehrer Hitler and Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop in Poland.

The Germans, he said, had bombed military objectives in Warsaw, but, knowing that the fall of the city was a certainty, they had taken pains to avoid bombing areas inhabited by noncombatants.

After his visit to the Eastern Front, he returned to Berlin, and then went to see the Siegfried Line, which he told foreign correspondents was unconquerable.

The German soldiers, he said today, were very well trained and disciplined and there was excellent co-operation between infantry, planes and mechanized units.

Spends Summer at Capri

Mrs. Williams spent the summer at her villa at Capri. She left for France, though, when war seemed imminent, and arrived in Paris the day before it was declared.

French soldiers, she said, were desperately in need of blankets. She hopes to raise funds to buy American blankets to send to France.

There were 871 American citizens on board, or slightly less than half the passenger total. Cabin class, with 232 passengers, was not crowded, but there were 479 passengers in tourist class, and 1,058 in third.

Polish Aristocracy detained

Among the passengers were Karin Branzell and Herbert Janssen, Wagnerian singers, returning to sing at the Metropolitan Opera; Maurice Dekobra, French author; Prince and Princess Orsini, arriving to visit their sons in California, and Baron Arvid de Bodisco and his wife, members of Poland's aristocracy.

The baron and baroness were held on the liner awaiting transfer to Ellis Island. Immigration officials would not disclose the reason for their detention, but said a technical question led to the action.

1,200 American Sail

Rotterdam, Oct. 15 (AP).—The Netherlands liner Rotterdam sailed early today for New York with almost 1,200 Americans.

Most of the passengers were women and children who were given priority in obtaining ship accommodations.

The liner Staatendam is scheduled to leave October 22 with about 900 American passengers.

military airfield at Staacken, a suburb of Berlin. The ceiling was claimed to have been very low—although stars shone over Berlin—and the pilot lost his way. When the anti-aircraft batteries opened fire, the pilot endeavored to gain altitude in order to get out of range, but this was asserted to have convinced the ground crew batteries it was an enemy machine.

This explanation follows a communique issued early this morning, stating that an airplane of "unknown nationality," which was flying so high it could not be seen, but only heard, had been taken under antiaircraft fire.

The communique from the high command of the German army, however, states merely that "in the night of the 14th and 15th an audible motor roar over north German territory resulted in antiaircraft artillery fire at various places."

For the rest, yesterday was an exceedingly quiet day for the military. Nothing important, it was stated, happened in the east. The army communique reported only "weak artillery fire" from the enemy in the west, which was "returned."

On Friday, the 13th, however, the army reports, an enemy airplane was shot down in the vicinity of Birkenfeld, some 30 miles northeast of the French border, in the Saarbruechen sector.

Latin-Americans On Tour of U. S.

New Orleans, Oct. 15 (U.P.).—Mabel Vernon, director of the Peoples' Mandate Committee, and five Latin-American representatives arrived today on a tour of 40 cities in an efforts to promote a peace from of the two Americas.

They left Washington Thursday, and leaves New Orleans tonight for Fort Worth, Tex. Other members of the group were:

Miss Suzana Perez Irigoyen, of Buenos Aires; Mrs. Angela Acuna de Chacon, of San Jose, Costa Rica; Miss Mercedes Guerra, of Havana; Mrs. Lucia Fonseca, of Rio de Janeiro, and Miss Yvonne Gonzales, of Caracas, Venezuela.

Siegfried Line Held Impassable

GEN. JUICHI TERAUCHI, commander of the Japanese forces in North China in 1937-38 and war minister in 1938-37, who arrived in New York yesterday on the liner Rex after inspecting Germany's Western and Polish fronts, says that the Allies will not be able to penetrate the Siegfried Line. He was one of four Japanese delegates to the Nuremburg Nazi Congress which was canceled

Soviet-Nazi Defense Talks Reported Near

Berlin Awaiting Arrival of 'High Russian Official'

By the United Press.

Berlin, Oct. 15.—Informed Nazi quarters tonight reported that Germany and Soviet Russia will begin consultations tomorrow on "common defense measures" to be taken as result of the Allies' rejection of Fuehrer Hitler's recent peace proposals.

The Soviet ambassador to Berlin, who has been in Moscow, is returning early this week and probably will be accompanied by "a high Russian official," Nazis said.

It was reported persistently that Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotoff or Vice Commissar Potemkin might come to Berlin, but there was no official confirmation.

May Threaten Force

It is impossible to predict what the outcome of the German and Soviet consultations will be but observers spoke of three possibilities.

Another declaration reaffirming Nazi-Bolshevist solidarity but making no mention of combined military action agains the Allies.

An attempt to force a termination of the war by means of an open threat of common military action.

A joint "last attempt" to bring about peace.

An authoritative Nazi statement said:

"Just as Germany cornered Britain military and politically through her agreement with Russia she also has received from Russia economic support necessary for superior powers of resistance."

It was stated here that, while "preliminary points" still remain to be settled, it is expected that deliberation will start without delay as to the nature of common action to be taken by Germany and Soviet Russia as result of what Nazis call "Britain's mad determination to continue this senseless war."

It was understood that a number of Russian army officers will tour Germany's Westwall fortifications soon, and that Soviet naval officers will inspect German coastal defenses.

Reports still persisted that, as an outgrowth of the direct German-Soviet talks under the "consultive clause" of the September 26 agreement between the two powers, a further conference, including Italian leaders, soon may be held somewhere in Italy.

Nazis said Premier Mussolini may be counted upon to give military aid to Germany whenever Hitler "gives the word" invoking the Italo-German military alliance.

Thus far, it appears, neither Soviet Russian not Italy has given Hitler any direct pledge of military aid.

Red Warships at Tallinn

Copyright by New York Times.

Tallinn, Oct. 15.—One Soviet cruiser and ten smaller warships are anchored in Tallinn Bay today. In accordance with the Russio-Estonian pact the first batch of Soviet troops, numbering 300, were landed at Paldiski (Baltic port) from the transport Luga and one of the warships.

The men will be engaged in coastal defense work and are being billeted with private citizens in the town. A larger body of troops is arriving at Paldiski Wednesday.

An agreement on the questions arising out of the evacuation of Germans from Estonia was signed by the Estonian and German governments tonight. Difficulties have been encountered over the economic consequences of the move but they have been ironed out. The first German ship is expected to leave Tallinn tomorrow with aged and sick people.

The officers, it is reported, were unfriendly.

French Expect New Peace Bid From Hitler

If It Fails, Parisians Believe, He'll Try to Break Maginot Line

Paris, Oct. 15.—Fuehrer Hitler is expected to make a final diplomatic effort this week to obtain peace on the basis of the status quo in eastern Europe. If this move fails, it is believed here, Hitler will order a general offensive by his armies in an attempt to break through the Maginot line.

French military writers assert that the Fuehrer has massed 800,000 picked troops on the Western Front, most of the mdrawn from Poland, with a view of launching them on a smashing oensive.

As yet, however, fighting as it was understood in the World War has not begun on the Franco-German front. For the last three weeks' action has been confined to skirmishes of reconnoitering squads, occasional airplane dogfights and mild artillery duels. Even this kind of activity has died down since last Thursday, largely because of bad weather.

Weather Foggy, Rainy

The French communique issued tonight is typical of those of the last few days. It says: "Weather foggy and Rainy. A day without great activity on the front. To the northwest of Wissembourg our ambushes have obtained the results sought for."

This last sentence in the communique is of extreme interest for it indicates that the French high command is particularly anxious to obtain information from German prisoners concerning what is going on at the other side of the Lauter Diver. It is in this region that the terrain which opens out into the plain of Alsace is best adapted by nature for a German offensive.

The reconnaissance of French and British planes have made it apparent that the shock troops of the German army and their best mechanized divisions, which wrought so much havoc in Poland, are ready for action on the western front. Their commander, Gen. Walther Von Brauchitsch, is only awaiting orders from Hitler to put his force into motion.

Talks Reported Planned

In diplomatic circles in Paris, however, the impression prevails that Hitler will try a last diplomatic maneuver to get what he wants without fighting. It is reported from neutral countries that he will invite Soviet Premier Molotoff and Count Ciano, Italian foreign minister, to comme to Berlin to talk with Foreign Secretary Von Ribbentrop.

Paris does not believe the Nazi Fuehrer will succeed in getting Russian atnd Italian support for his peace move. According to reports received here from Ankara, Turkey, Josef Stalin has assured Sukru Saracoglu, the Turkish foreign minister, that the Russians will never fight on the side of Germany.

It is also believed in the French capital that Premier Mussolini intends to adhere to the attitude outlined in the Italian government's note of September 1 which stated that Italy intended to remain outside the conflict.

Nazis Dissatisfied

Hitler's intense desire to make peace now, according to messages from neutral countries, is said to have resulted from fear of the growing power of Russia in the Baltic. Even Nazi leaders are reported to be dissatisfied with the high price Hitler has paid for Russian aid.

French and foreign observers of the political situation in Europe believe the leaders of the Reich are bound to make in the near future an attempt to strengthen their position in the Balkans. It is indicated that the Reich's ability to resist a long blockade will depend on the supplies that Germany can receive from the Soviet Union and the Balkan states.

The Danube, it is said, may be expected to be the main artery of supplies for the Reich. Person who know conditions on that river are cinced that shipping facilities at present are insufficient. The Germans, therefore, are expected to build more barges and tankers for the Danubian traffic and tighten their grip on the Danubian countries.

Commercial Missions Fail

German commercial missions which visited the Balkan capitals after the opening of the war have failed in their objectives. Russia's march into Poland, Italy's competition, especially in Yugoslavia, and the commercial offensive of the Allies have handicapped the German trade delegations.

Germany sought to force Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Rumania to deliver her goods on credit, or against marks. Bulgaria has, however, reduced instead of increased her usual assignment of meat and tobacco to the Reich. It is reported that Yugoslavia has halved the exports of wheat to Germany and left unchanged the exports of timber and metals. The negotiations with Rumania are apparently not yet ended, but experts believe that Rumania could not deliver more oil to Germany unless Germany could double her fleet of barges on the Danube.

Since the beginning of the war, Germany's prestige has fallen noticeably, despite her easy victory over Poland.

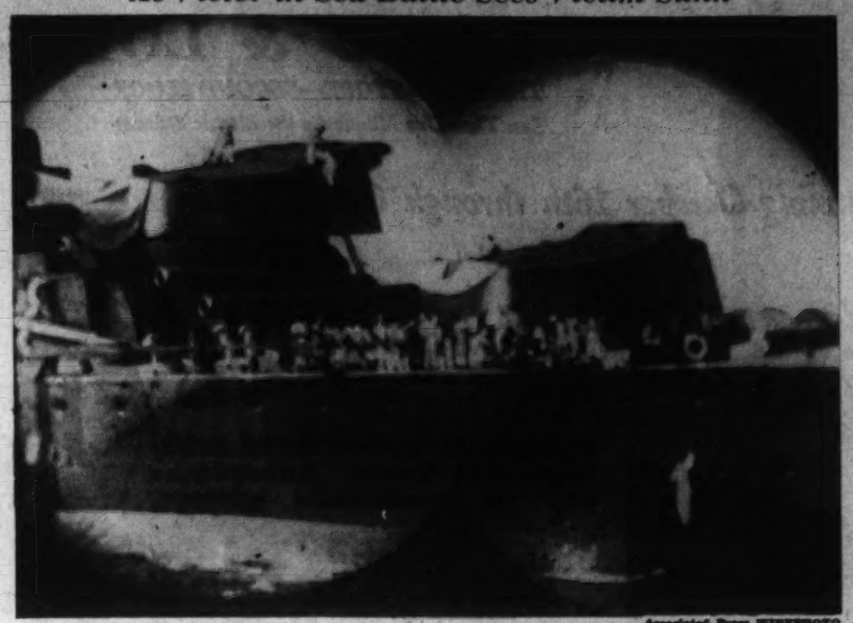
As Victor in Sea Battle Sees Victim Sunk



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

The fantasy of a year ago became a tragic reality Saturday when, with the sinking of the British Royal Oak, a motion picture plot came to life—and almost 800 English officers and sailors died. The above picture was made when the admiralty loaned the battlewagon to a film company to play the "heavy" in the movie, "Torpedoed." This scene was shown as the last view the victorious captain had of the sinking ship. Saturday the admiralty announced H. M. S. Royal Oak was sent to the bottom by a Nazi submarine neutrality in the case France and and Britain should fight Russia.

Saracoglu was reported to have made it plain Turkey would fight with the Allies if Italy joined Germany.

He flatly refused to be an accomplice to the proposed splitting up of Rumania and reminded the Kremlin chiefs that Turkey could mobilize nearly 2,000,000 men, it was said.

[A Bucharest dispatch to the New York Times said Saracoglu was reported leaving Moscow tonight, going directly to Turkey. The Times Moscow correspondent said, however, these reports were "contradicted by events" adding that although Saracoglu did not see Soviet Premier Molotoff today, he might confer with him later tonight.

[The Bucharest informants emphasized that Turkey is not expected to conclude any agreements with Russia infringing on her previous commitments to Britain and France.

London dispatches recently have said British officials had approved Turkey's position in refusing to permit their agreements to include Turkish belligerence toward Russia.—Editor's note.]

Russian troop concentrations which were reported in the Caucasus not only would threaten Turkey but also the rich Iraq oil fields, now one of Great Britain's main sources of supply.

Under a treaty among Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Afghanistan, a threat of aggression against one of these powers would oblige the others to consider aid.

Some political circles here said they believed the Soviets would turn their attention to recovering Bessarabia from Rumania as soon as their demands on Finland were settled. Before the World War, Bessarabia, rich in oil, was a part of Russia.

(Russia recently assured Rumania that she would take no violent action in regard to Bessarabia.)

In connection with the calling up of the Bulgarian reservists, it was pointed out that Turkey, an ally of Rumania as well as of Greece and Yugoslavia in the Balkan Entente, still has many troops on the Bulkarian frontier.

Troops Reported Moving

It was reliably reported here that Rumanian troops withdrawn from the Hungarian frontier following a recent agreement with the Budapest government are being moved hastily to Rumania's borders with Russia.

(This agreement apparently settled, at least temporarily, Hungary's claims on Transylvania, which Rumania won in the break-up of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

(Bulgaria, against whose territorial revision claims the Balkan Entente was directed, like Soviet Russia, lost territory to Rumania in post-World War settlements. These Bulgarian claims, principally for Dobruja, Rumania's Black Sea province, reportedly were the chief stumbling block to formation of a Balkan neutrality front, which had been rumored to be one of the topics of Saracoglu's conversations in Moscow.)

Cause of Deadlock

London (Monday), Oct. 16 (U.P.).—The News Chronicle's Istanbul correspondent, today reported that Russia's renewed demand that Turkey break her negotiations for alliances with Britain and France had caused a collapse of the Russo-Turkish negotiations in Moscow.

Soviet Denies Massing

Copyright by New York Times.

Moscow, Oct. 15.—A strong denial that the Soviet was concentrating troops on the Turkish frontier was issued tonight by Tass, the Soviet official news agency. Tass declared:

"English papers, the Manchester Guardian, News Chronicle and Yorkshire Post, published a report of the British United Press on the troops in the caucuses, referring to a Moscow radio station broadcast in confirmation of this report.

"Tass is empowered to declare that this report as well as reference to the radio station was a malicious invention, circulated with an obyious provocative intention."

It is understood the report in question was published Thursday. From the vigor with which it was denied it may be assumed that it was considered here the report was started in some quarter interested in upsetting the Russo-Turkish negotiations — apparently not British since the British throughout have been satisfied with their course.

old son in the sea for 90 minutes before being rescued.

Passengers said several lifeboats were destroyed by shellfire. Many of them thought the alarm signal meant a practice call and were surprised to find that they were under fire. According scrambling for the boats. Among the people killed were a blind Arab and a former convict being returned home. The radio officer was wounded at his post by shelling.

Food Refused, U-Boat Fires

The Steamer Louisiane was shelled after she had refused food supplies to the submarine which stopped her, one of the Lochavon crew rescued by the same ship is reported to have said. The U-boat then fired a shell at the bridge killing the chief officer. The captain was unhurt but a seaman standing on the bridge lost an eye.

The skipper of the Lochavon, a 9,205-ton steamer belonging to the Royal Mail line, said he got off with his crew of 56 and 6 passengers only to count noses and find that one of his ship's company was missing. Going back to the sinking ship he found the missing one snoring in a bunk and after arousing him the skipper effected the rescue.

The Louisiane's skipper, whose first mate was "blown to pieces" by shrapnel, said the German submarine commander had been very courteous "after the trouble he had caused."

30 Land in Stretchers

The captain of the Bretagne, a ship of 10,108 tons, was wounded by shrapnel and many of the women among his 124 passengers were wounded by shellfire. Thirty stretcher cases from the Bretagne were landed at the port to which the destroyers brought the survivors.

The Bretagne's master said that aboard the rescue ship that brought him and his crew to shore were several men in uniforms of the Nazi navy. Whether they were survivors of the submarine which sank his ship, he said, he did not know. Nor was it known whether they were the crew of one of the four submarines destroyed by the British navy Friday and Saturday.

Capt. Goncours, master of the Bretagne which was owned by the Compagnie Generale de Transatlantique, said the ship was attacked at 5 o'clock Saturday morning.

Fired on Bridge

"We were first attacked by shellfire," he said. "This was the first indication of the presence of enemy craft. Deliberate fire was maintained on the ship's upper works, the bridge, lifeboats, wireless and the wireless room.

"In due course we had to take to our boats. Before this, a number of people had been injured by shrapnel which was repeatedly being fired from the deck of a submarine which we could not see. About 9 o'clock our lifeboats were picked up by destroyers. . . .

Henri Farcia, a passenger from Guadaloupe, told this story:

500 Meters Away

"Away in the distance I could glimpse a steamer which I thought was the Oregon, which had been with us the previous day. Then I saw what I thought was a small boat. It came toward us and when about 500 meters away I saw it was a submarine. At that distance she opened fire with shrapnel directed at our wireless, the bridge and on our decks. Our smokestack was damaged and then we had to take to our boats."

At 9 o'clock Friday night, the Louisiane, also of the Compagnie General de Transatlantique, outward bound from the United Kingdom for Havana, under command of Capt. Bondin, when attacked by a submarine.

Bondin said, "I had no warning. Shots were fired at our rigging and wireless. And there was a violent explosion doing so much damage that we had to take to our boats. When we were in our boats the submarine came alongside my boat. The captain of the submarine was very nice to me, after the trouble he had created. He said, 'It is the war.' He offered me food, bread and other provisions but I declined. He was very good.

"There was only one casualty among my crew," added the captain. "We were picked up by two destroyers half an hour fater we had been in our boats."

All Saved on British Ship

The Lochavon, commanded by Capt. C. E. Rathkins, was homeward bound from North Pacific ports with a large cargo of fruit. All hands were saved.

At 4:30 o'clock Saturday morning, said Rathkins, the Lochavon was attacked without warning by a submarine. There was no panic of any kind and the captain, crew and passengers got away in orderly manner within 10 minutes. There was an explosion in No. 2 hold. The ship's lifeboats had been already provisioned in readiness for any emergency.

"When last seen" said one member of the Lochavon's crew, "she was still afloat. We were eight hours in our boats. After being struck, the Lochavon immediately started to list badly to the port and it was very fortunate that we were struck so far forward, as otherwise, we should have sunk immediately. The hatches were blown skyhigh."

The sinking of three ships came on the heels of the Admiralty announcement yesterday that the battleship Royal Oak had been sunk by an enemy torpedo. A communique issued late today placed the total number of rescued at 414, of the approximately 1,200 officers and men. The official statement said that the possibility that there would be additional survivors, was "remote."

68 Sunk, Is Total

The sinkings brought to 68 the number of vessels sent to the bottom by German submarines since the outbreak of war on September 3.

With the sinkings of the Bretagne and Louisiane the French have lost five vessels to German submarines, while the British, with the sinking of the Lochavon, have lost 36, in addition to the Royal Oak and the aircraft carrier Courageous.

While charging off the loss of the Royal Oak to one of the ill "fortunes of war," the admiralty pressed its campaign against submarines, of which it declared three had been sunk Friday.

Churchill to Report

Britain's warship construction program is on a wartime footing, and though nine battleships are reported on the ways, the admiralty refused to divulge any details as to the stage of construction or the possibilities of lauching in the belief that it was naval intelligence of value to the enemy.

The nation, eager for information on how submarines sank the Royal Oak, which herself sank four German ships during the World War Battle of Jutland, looked to Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, for a fuller report in the House of Commons, where he is scheduled to make his weekly report Tuesday.

Germans Mine New Zone

Berlin, Oct. 15 (INS).—Germany tonight announced a new mined zone has been established in the western Baltic to protect the Reich's coast against attack by the British navy.

All German and neutral ship operators were notified of the zone's boundaries which fringe Denmark's territorial waters, and ships were warned not to attempt sailing into the area without obtaining German pilot boats to guide them.

Victim Carried Planes

San Pedro, Calif., Oct. 15 (AP).—The British merchant ship Lochavon carried 25 or 30 cases of airplane engines and aircraft parts manufactured in southern California factories.

The Lochavon loaded the parts and slipped from Los Angeles Harbor September 11, it was learned.

Approximately 4,000 tons of canned and fresh fruit from California and the Pacific Northwest were reported aboard the ship.

Neutrality Debate's End Due This Week

Byrd Attacks 90-Day Credits; Pittman Ready With Shipping Changes

trade with belligerent lands where there is little or no danger of their being sunk, such as the western coast of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other possessions of the warring powers.

Opponents of embargo repeal are split on the issue of shipping restrictions but have indicated a greater degree of unanimity on opposition to the 90-day credit provision. Some of the far Western Senators among opponents of the pending bill are supporting amendments that would give Pacific shipping, far removed from the scene of hostilities, wider privileges than under present provisions which would prohibit American ships carrying goods to a belligerent land anywhere.

While Senate Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, was hopeful that the proposed amendments could be disposed of and the bill be passed and sent to the House by the end of next week, Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, declared that some of the suggested changes, notably those dealing with shipping and credit, would be given extensive consideration.

There was some talk, meanwhile, of starting Senate sessions an hour earlier, at 11 a. m., daily, to bring about an earlier final vote, but Barkley said no definite plan had been worked out. Borah expressed the view that sessions might continue past the 5 p. m. closing time heretofore observed, but doubted an agreement would be reached to open earlier in the day.

Opponents Look to House

Opponents of the bill are known to be looking hopefully to the House to defeat it. Many of them are said to feel that passage of more time will help the opponents, Borah remarking yesterday that public reaction is "all one way," against embargo repeal.

Senator Byrd pointed out in his statement that he often had differed with the President on domestic issues, but said:

"I wholeheartedly give him my support in the essentials of his present foreign policies. I do not mean that all details of the proposed legislation are perfect.

"Some amendments may be wisely adopted, but I do say that the President is eminently right in urging the repeal of the law existing and substituting the cash and carry plan with the prohibition of American ships trading with belligerent nations and keeping American citizens out of combat zones.

3 Opponents to Speak

"The situation is grave and effective action to protect America requires tolerance and generosity among men on both sides who at times have been opponents in our domestic policies. National unity in foreign affairs can only come by a united support of all parties and factions. This may be best brought about by full recognition at all times on the part of the executive branch of the joint responsibility of Congress; full and frequent consultation with standing committees dealing with foreign affairs."

Byrd said he was convinced the existing embargo law "is much more likely to involve us in war than the proposed legislation now pending before Congress."

Senators Clark (Democrat), Idaho; Capper (Republican), Kansas, and Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, opponents of repeal, and Senator Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana, supporter of the bill, are to speak today when the Senate resumes debate.

The main issue of the embargo was debated on the air again last night by Senator McNary (Oregon), minority leader, and Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida.

Smathers Attacks Hitler

In addition, Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, made public a letter to a constituent in which the Senator said Hitler was welcome to consider his vote for repeal as "unfriendly."

"This Nation," he wrote, "cannot use its friendship to give aid and comfort to a government which has broken every pledge it ever made, nor would that friendship receive the slightest consideration of its became convenient or profitable for the Hitler government to take advantage of some situation in the future."

McNary, speaking on the Mutual Radio Forum of the Air, urged retention of the arms embargo, arguing that sale of arms to one side in the war would amount to actual participation. He said sale of munitions to the Allies in the World War "aroused the hatred of the German nation against us," and continued:

"In their desperation, the Germans determined to stop the export of American munitions at all costs.

Germany Harder to Starve Out Than in 1914, Analysist Says

Conquest of Poland Removes Shortage Of Coal, Survey Declares, but Allies Have Superior Economic Staying Power

A belief that Great Britain and France may find it more difficult to "starve out" Germany this time than in the World War was expressed yesterday by the Foreign Policy Association.

The association, a privately funded organization, said in a survey by John C. de Wilde and others that Germany's industrial capacity was "far superior" to World War days and its food production larger.

"The Reich's most serious deficiencies are in iron, petroleum and rubber," the report said. "For iron, it must largely rely on Sweden, for mineral oil, on Rumania and the Soviet Union. For this reason control over Swedish and Rumanian resources will be hotly contested by all belligerents.

Soviet Supplies Remote

"While the Soviet Union can theoretically supply considerable quantities of manganese, timber and oil, the remoteness of these raw material sources from the German frontier, together with the lack of adequate transportation facilities, may greatly limit its assistance to Germany even if Russia is inclined to aid."

The conquest of Poland, it said, "has completely relieved the threatened shortage of coal in Germany and given the country a large exportable surplus which it can barter against food and raw materials."

Britain's chief problem remains, as in the World War, "how to maintain a regular supply of footstuffs and industrial raw materials from overseas," since Britain by itself "is as poor in natural resources as Germany."

French Facilities Better

If France, behind the Maginot Line, the report continues, "remains free of large-scale military invasion, its ability to turn out war supplies should be considerably greater than in the World War."

Assets abroad of France and Britain make their problem of paying for imports not much more difficult than in 1914-18, but Germany's foreign resources are much inferior to those in 1914, the association said, and its ability to pay for vital imports is much smaller.

"As soon as Germany has dissipated its limited foreign assets," de Wilde wrote, "it may be compelled by military necessity to seize direct control of important sources of supply in southeastern and northern Europe.

The American neutrality law is a factor in making the British and French positions worse than in 1914 in breaking Britain's lifelines to overseas countries, the association observed. "The economic staying power of the Allies would again appear to be greater than that of Germany."

There was nothing for President Wilson to do but acknowledge these attacks on us and ask Congress formally to declare the war which already existed.

Fears Repetition of 1917

"I now hear members of Congress saying that they will never vote for the involvement of this country in war. But what else can they do if the events of 1914 to 1917 are repeated?"

Pepper, on the other hand, said he was determined that no American law should "help to give to Hitler, or to any European dictator, the power to bring war to where it could prostitute from peace to war the oceans which touch our shores" or the lands of the other American republics.

Terming Hitler an "international brigand," the Florida senator declared:

"If American goods or guns are bought and taken home by any country which uses them in the defense of human freedom, for the preservation of the Christian religion, for the sanctity of human rights, the sacredness of human hope and aspirations, I thank God for it."

Senator Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin, speaking over the N.B.C. system, declared that neither repeal of the embargo nor failure to repeal it would involve this country in the war.

Japan to Seek New Trade Pact With U. S.

Premier Abe Wants Treaty to Replace 1911 Agreement

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (Monday), Oct. 16.—Premier Gen. Abe intimated in an interview published today in Japanese-language newspapers that Japan would take steps to negotiate a new commercial treaty with the United States.

(The United States on July 26 notified Japan that the American-Japanese commerce and amity treaty of 1911 would be terminated six months from the date of notification.)

"It may not be possible temporarily to extend the 1911 treaty, once it is abrogated," the premier was quoted as saying, "but it may be possible to negotiate a new one as a provisional measure, at least."

He said several possibilities were being considered, but he declined to give any details.

With United States Ambassador Grew back at his post, it was expected that trade discussions would start soon.

The premier, meanwhile, yielding to strong pressure from agrarian groups, appointed Count Tadamasa Sakai as full-time minister of agriculture.

Vice Admiral Takuo Godo previously had held both the commerce and agriculture portfolios, but agrarian leaders, saying agriculture thereby was neglected, refused to co-operate.

The premier's capitulation after a two-week discussion marked his second organizational defeat. He accepted responsibility last week for a foreign office controversy in which 150 employes tendered their resignations because a proposed trade ministry, would deprive their office of some of its functions.

Croat Leader Urges People To End Killings

Assassinations Will Be Harmful to All, Vice Premier Warns

By the Associated Press

Zagreb, Yugoslavia, Oct. 15.—Vice Premier Vladko Matchek, leader of the Croat minority, today appealed to his followers to end a wave of political assassinations which has taken at least 12 lives since the Croats were granted autonomy last August.

Most of the victims have been police officials. Some were Serbs and others were Croats who cooperated with the Serbs before the Croats were granted home rule.

"It is comprehensible," Matchek said in his appeal," that Croats hate the enemies who fought them during the dictatorship, but now that self-administration has been established this can only be harmful to Croatia."

The Croat press said that the killings were inspired by "enemies of Croatia" in an attempt to prove the 5,000,000 Croats were unable to govern themselves.

As a result of the attacks on Croats who "played the Serb game," Belgrade has 200 Croat refugees who fled fearing violence from their own people.

Reich to Aid Belgrade

Belgrade, Oct. 5.—The German minority press is divided in opinion on whether Germany will be able to maintain her exports to Yugoslavia.

The Jagreb Morgenblatt yesterday quoted authoritative Berlin sources to the effect that the Reich would have to cut down its exports to souheast Europe, but today's Deutsches Volksblatt Novisad says the Reich is ready to assist Yugoslavia in rearmament, electrification, road building and agricultural mechanization.

Minister of Commerce Andres announced important trade conversations would shortly take place with Italy and Hungary.

Green Directed To Notify I.T.U. Of Its Suspension

Cincinnati, Oct. 15 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor executive council directed President William Green today to officially notify the International Typographical Union, one of the oldest A. F. L. affiliates, of its suspension for refusal to pay a per capita tax fro a fund to combat C. I. O. organization drives.

Although Green was directed to notify A. F. L. State federations and city councils of the suspension, they are not to be asked to disassociate the I. T. U. locals at this time.

Some council sources expressed hope that the I. T. U. would reverse its stand after the Union's election in May and then be returned to the A. F. L. fold.

Too Long Vacant

Reports of a major shake-up in the Navy Department serve as a reminder that the post of Secretary of the Navy has been vacant for more than three months. Secretary Swanson died on July 7. For many months prior to his death the Secretary had been too ill to take an active part in the direction of naval affairs. A heavy burden has thus been imposed upon Assistant Secretary Charles Edison.

Even in normal times it is undesirable to leave the top position in a major department of Government vacant for so long a period. From the Navy's viewpoint, moreover, these are not normal times. That department is engaged in extensive building operations designed to strengthen the Navy in a critical period. It should be functioning at the peak of efficiency.

It is reported that some serious mistakes have been made in the design and equipment of twelve new destroyers recently built or still under construction. Because the destroyers turned out to be many tons heavier than was expected, with the extra weight too high above the waterline, it is said that they are not as stable as they should be. If this report is well founded, some vital decisions must be made in the Navy Department. And it is always difficult to make such decisions when the secretaryship is vacant.

No doubt the President is loath to interrupt the neutrality debate in the Senate by sending any nominations to that body. Yet it is obvious that a new Secretary of the Navy should be appointed with the least possible delay. Prompt action at the White House could not be reasonably interpreted as hasty judgment, for the President must have already decided who his nominee for this key position will be.

One Who Got Slapped

When at the age of 12 years George Stitch ran away from his home in Wisconsin to join a Shakespearean repertory company, he realized that, if he were to rise in the profession, he would have to change the honest but plebeian name he had inherited. It would hardly do as a name to appear someday on billboards in conjunction with Hamlet, Lear, Romeo and Marc Antony. So he chose the name of Ford Sterling.

It did indeed become a famous name—the name, not of a great tragedian but of a master of coarse and ribald farce. Ford Sterling was destined to become chief of Mack Sennett's Keystone Kops. His face, or a caricature of it, became more familiar than William Jennings Bryan's. Night after night in the nickelodeons of the land, Sterling led his uniformed clowns through an uproarious dreamworld of telephones, nightsticks, black marias, custard pies, banana peels, bathing beauties, buckets of paperhanger's paste and troughs of uncongealed cement.

Of course there were other faces in the Keystone Comedies that were equally or perhaps even more familiar, those of the melancholy Chaplin and the strabismic Ben Turpin, and those of Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand of unhappy destiny. Some of these won a larger share of the national laughter than Sterling, but they won it because of business or the costumes that Sterling, as the assistant director, had improvised for them.

It is not easy now to explain the exuberant joy that prewar film audiences found in these Keystone Comedies, and more particularly in the mad tribulations of the Keystone Kops. That, of course, was a day when vehicular traffic was a comparatively simple problem and when crime was virtually unorganized. In the imaginations of the urban masses the policeman was still a considerably less than heroic figure. Perhaps it flattered our latent anarchism to see him represented as grotesque, moronic and incurably venal.

Or maybe the secret lay in the element of flight and pursuit, which was a staple ingredient of all those Keystone Comedies. Spiritually, most of us are in one way or another fugitives. And Nemesis is certainly less frightful to contemplate when she is digging out of her eyesockets the custard from a well thrown pie.

Strength In Unity

Coincident with the departure from Moscow of the Finnish delegation, presumably for the purpose of reporting the progress of its negotiations with the Kremlin and of obtaining further instructions, a slight easing in Russo-Finnish tension is being noted.

It may be that Russia's actual demands on Finland are less drastic or at least less peremptory than was at first anticipated. It is possible that the friendly representations made independently at Moscow by the United States and jointly by Sweden, Norway and Denmark have had a moderating effect on the Bolshevik leaders. For the moment, at any rate, the possibility of continued peace between Russia and Finland appears somewhat brighter.

It is much too early, however, for either Finland or any of the other Scandinavian democracies to give way to an excess of optimism. Their position is, at best, parlous. For the time being the Russian threat is in the foreground. But some of them, notably Sweden, have been under pressure from Germany as well. They must reckon with the possibility that independently or in concert Stalin and Hitler may seek to divide the Scandinavian area into Russian and German spheres of influence in the same way that they partitioned Poland.

No one of the four nations of the Northland is in any position effectively to defend its independence against either Russia or Germany and certainly not against both. Yet it is obvious that alone each of the Scandinavian countries is very much weaker than they are as a group. That is precisely why the Swedish monarch last week invited and received acceptances from the Kings of Denmark and Norway and the President of Finland to meet him in Stockholm this Wednesday to discuss the Finnish-Russian question.

The habit of cooperation is strong among these progressive nations. They share not only a common culture that goes back many hundreds of years but also a common way of life. In all four of these nations political democracy is combined with a large measure of social equality. In each of them the educational level is remarkably high. And each is imbued with a firm determination to resist assaults on its independence.

In the days when the league was still functioning these four nations worked together at Geneva and during recent years have done everything possible to foster economic cooperation among themselves. A symbol of this tendency was the publication two years ago of a joint volume portraying the place of the northern countries in world economy.

To this similarity of culture, political ideology and degree of civilization there is now added the realization of a common threat to their independence and neutrality. Alone none of them is very large or populous. Together, however, they have a population of close to 17,000,000 inhabiting an area rich in agricultural and industrial resources. In drawing together in the face of a possible assault on their security and territorial integrity they are, in effect, giving notice that such an attack upon any of them will not go uncontested. In such unity there is strength.

Jobs For Older Workers

Investigation shows that there is a steady rise in the percentage of unemployed men after the age of 40. The number of unemployed in the upper-age groups would undoubtedly be even greater if it were not for the fact that many older employes are protected against dismissals by employer personnel policies or by union rules and regulations. The extent of the handicap of older workers is not fully realized until they are forced to compete with younger men for new jobs in a restricted labor market.

In occupations calling for speed in action and exceptional physical endurance, younger men are naturally and properly preferred. There are, however, many kinds of work in which the experience and acquired skill of older workers are great assets to an employer. And, laying prejudice aside, there is undoubtedly a wide range of occupations in which age is not a relevant factor in determining fitness for employment.

Apart from questions of individual fitness, it is essential for industry to provide places for older workers on an expanding scale. Because of our declining birth rate, the percentage of individuals in the upper-age groups is rising while the percentage in the younger-age groups is declining. Employment policies must be adapted to this changing age composition of the population to prevent old-age dependency from becoming an insupportable burden upon the younger generation.

Moreover, even if the country were rich enough to maintain a large proportion of its adult citizenry in idleness, it ought not to do so. The health and happiness of the great majority of able-bodied people can be assured only by providing them with some kind of useful employment.

It is most encouraging, therefore, to find industrial leaders taking an increasing interest in their older employes. A number of important concerns located in Rochester employing over 35,000 persons have committed themselves to a hiring policy designed to maintain a balance between younger and older workers. That is, they aim to keep the percentage of workers above 40 approximately equal to the percentage of persons in that age group within the community.

Plans of this sort require adjustments that are not always easy to make. Jobs will have to be classified with reference to the age of workers. In some cases aging employes will have to be shifted to new positions for which some special training may be needed. But the fact that the Rochester concerns believe the policy feasible and compatible with efficient management shows that the difficulties are not excessive.

Indeed, an industrial society unable to provide adequate working opportunities for people beyond 40 would lose the right to continued existence.

Protecting Civil Rights

The light-hearted way in which the District police have made free with the contents of a brief case belonging to the secretary of the local branch of the Socialist Party lends added significance to the address of Attorney General Murphy before the National Conference on Civil Liberties in New York. "In our zeal to protect ourselves from internal aggression," he said, "we must be on our guard that we ourselves are not guilty of aggression against the civil liberties of our own citizens."

Ignorance and the fear born of ignorance are among the chief incitements to suppression of civil liberties in times of crisis. Lack of faith in the basic principles of the democracy in which we profess to believe is another cause of antiliberal demonstrations. As Mr. Murphy says, there are some "sincere individuals" who believe that, under present conditions, it is not possible to maintain both our civil liberties and a strong defense against internal attack. Those who so argue are following along the dialectic trail blazed by apologists for authoritarian political systems.

Democracy does not need to become "something other than a democracy in order to protect its national interests," as the Attorney General well says.

It is reassuring to have his promise that the Department of Justice, in its enforcement of the law, will see that its officials themselves obey the law. The success with which we suppress subversive activities will be judged not by our ability to intimidate but by our ability to fight the forces of disintegration without doing violence to the Bill of Rights.

Temporary Solution

Fortunately for Washington's crippled children the WPA has once more come to their aid by supplying funds for visiting teachers this winter. For the second time this responsibility, which properly rests upon the Board of Education, will be handled on an emergency basis by an organization whose purpose is not education but employment.

When the WPA faced retrenchments this year, it naturally eliminated this activity, originally undertaken only as a stopgap measure. The Federal Budget Bureau and Congress were expected to include the necessary $29,000 in the District budget. When they failed to do so, children unable to leave homes and hospitals faced a year without benefit of the "compulsory" education which those in good health take for granted.

The new shut-in program is scheduled to last only through the present fiscal year. After that, if Congress does not include a direct appropriation in next year's budget, chances for renewal even on an emergency basis are slim.

In that case an important, necessary and wholly praiseworthy work would come to an abrupt end. This would be either a cruel piece of carelessness, or a highly abortive type of economy.

Lo, The Poor Indian Summer

From the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Among items of scientific information which poets and fairy-tale tellers will heed with ill-concealed shudders is that which purports to give the true botanical-chemical story of why the leaves turn red and golden in the fall. This deucedly inconvenient canard upon Mother Nature, Jack Frost and the forest gnomes is revived by an associate professor of botany at Massachusetts State College, whose passion for accuracy is equaled only by his sublime indifference to the comfort of the human tongue and ear, and to the plight of compositors and proofreaders—who, come to think of it, also are human.

There is nothing magic, nothing to get excited about, in the transformation of the leaves, says the professor. The xanthophyll within them simply establishes itself gradually as the chlorophyll fades away, and erythrophyll adds a finishing touch. Or, to put it another way, yellow coloring matter supplants green and then comes red. In other words:

> "Now doth the little daffodil
> Proceed to lose its chlorophyll;
> And slowly shades of xanthophyll
> Come join in blaze erythrophyll."

A very pretty sentiment indeed, Mr. Professor, but hardly the one we'd choose to prattle off to the little tots, even if we were of the sing-song persuasion in matters of verse. "Jack Frost," we submit, continues to offer better prospects both as to rhyme and rhythm, and his ministrations require infinitely less explaining.

"Western Spirit"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the estimation of perhaps the great majority of "regular," intelligent people, Miss Dorothy Thompson, representing the interests of Western civilization, is an authority on the subjects relating to ethics, religion, politics, peace, war and its causes and cures. In other words, she is the intellectual Goliath as against, in the present situation, an enemy that is yet to be defined before a David may be looked for as a challenger.

But, who knows or may even guess, that the civilization so dear to the heart of the learned of this generation, being a false God in the sight of some higher type of beings, is not doomed to self-division and destruction like the old Tower of Babylon? This famous votary of Western civilization, writing in The Post, informs her readers that the Mohammedan world, China, Japan and India, do not know Christian ethics. And while thus upholding the superiority of Christian ethics, in the next breath, she tells us that her favored countries (America, Australia, etc.) "are ruled by one kind of spirit, the Western spirit."

Right here is the error of serving two masters, the practice of mental adultery. Is "Western spirit" another name for Christian ethics; are they identical, or are not they in most cases antithetical? And who is ready and capable to reason out these things to a logical conclusion? Those who are, might perhaps be the only ones qualified to also establish a sound basis for international understanding and lasting peace.

Who And What

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I've been much interested in the "disclosures" of the Dies Committee, and have also noted some of the hysterical reactions. Is there anything of disclosure in the announcement that there are spies in our Army and Navy, and elsewhere? Surely not. Haven't we a secret service? And do we not expect that some of the public servants in that branch of the executive will bring to light information of value to us? For one, I sincerely hope so.

Personally, I don't think anything is accomplished by the disclosures unless we find out something more than the fact that we have spies among us. What we need to know is who they are, rather than that they are—and what they are accomplishing, rather than that they are doing something. And, right in that connection, if there is a repeal of the arms embargo, it will be of much more importance to America to find the Hitlerites than the Stalinites; for the Hitlerites will most certainly be inclined to carry espionage to extremes—in other words, to do something besides reporting to Hitler.

Dutch Neutrality

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a native of the Netherlands I am naturally much pleased with the flattering remarks on the Netherlands in Dorothy Thompson's column for October 6. In order to give the readers of your paper a better understanding of the troubles and difficulties which the Netherlands had to face during the World War I should like to give some detailed information on this point.

The Netherlands armed forces were mobilized on August 1, 1914, and guarded the country's neutrality during the whole period of the war with great cost and consequently high taxes for the population and all the hindrances of the normal economic life of the nation. Almost immediately after the outbreak of the war a series of emergency measures introduced by the government were passed by Parliament without much delay to cope with the unusual circumstances.

The exchange at Amsterdam was regulated, maximum prices were set for most foodstuffs and other important commodities. Later on, around 1917, rationing of most foodstuffs became a necessity in order to prevent the starvation of the poorer classes of the population. The importation of grain was greatly reduced by marine warfare, and a considerable portion of the home production had to be exported in order to obtain coal and other commodities from abroad. An elaborate system of regulating the marketing of fruits and vegetables was invented to satisfy the demands of all belligerents.

Dutch shipping experienced great losses, many a steamer was sunk, but the people kept their heads cool and their powder dry and preferred the unavoidable losses in the merchant marine to being plunged into war. The food and fuel situation became precarious long before the signing of the armistice. Meat disappeared from the tables altogether, except for the rich who could afford the extremely high prices for the smuggled wares. Slaughtering was forbidden.

At present the situation is much better. For one thing there is plenty of coal from the domestic mines, among the best in the world, located in the extreme southern part of Limburg, the very region that is now in danger to become the scene of Hitler's marching columns when he should decide to violate the country's neutrality. Army and navy are again mobilized and the morale of the armed forces and the civilian population seems to be excellent. The Dutch people will undoubtedly fight if the borders of their prosperous country should be violated. But if it is again spared the horrors of war the government and the people will know the art of being neutral, an art which requires skill and self-restraint.

The Peace Offensive

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Germans have begun to carry on their peace offensive just as they did during the last war. Aside from trying to justify themselves before their own people and hoping to weaken the morale of the enemy, the major objective is to wangle an armistice, then a conference, convinced that once the democracies rest on their arms their soldiers could not be persuaded to resume the offensive.

In the meantime munitions would be piled up, the armistice would be denounced and a swift attack would insure German victory. They persisted in their efforts even after the armistice of 1918 had been signed. It will be interesting to follow their maneuvers throughout the duration of the present conflict.

Bolshevist Imperialism In Europe

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Walter Lippmann in his article of October 12 grasped the very point of the present actuality in Europe. Russia, having swallowed a part of Poland, having obtained complete control over all the Baltic States and preparing herself for a big jump on the Scandinavian countries, is at the very peak of an overwhelming expansion campaign in Europe.

Taking advantage of Hitler's lunatic policy, Bolshevik Russia prepares herself step by step for a big assault of the whole democratic world for a decisive victory of communism.

The question now, however, is whether Mr. Lippmann was also right in choosing Germany as Europe's chief protector against bolshevism, although at the moment "Nazism is incapable of providing this German protection."

We cannot agree with Mr. Lippmann on this point, as history proved for centuries past that Germany practically never was interested in putting a stop to the Russian-Asiatic trend into Central Europe and only used the slogan for an easier crushing of Poland. Going back to as far as the fifteenth century, we must realize that the Teutonic order, established to spread Christianity in the East, quickly changed that noble scheme into a less ideological, but more profitable imperialism aimed at the destruction of Poland.

These same Teuton knights gave birth to the Prussian dynasty of Hohenzollern which again, instead of stopping the Russian influx into Europe, made an alliance with the Czarina Catherine, in the eighteenth century in order to share with her in the spoils of the partition of Poland. During the World War in 1917, who was the first to sign an act of friendship with the Soviets, if not the vanquished armies of Germany? The Pact of Rapallo was the second stage in that German-Bolshevik plot, and with a gap of five years, when naziism was combatting communism, we are facing now the most criminal and cynical of all political arrangements in history—the Nazi-Soviet agreement on the partition of Catholic Poland, signed last month.

In the recent tragic conflict Germany has again betrayed her solidarity with Western civilization and preferred to crush Poland, the only efficient outpost against bolshevism, rather than to collaborate with the latter in solidifying the anti-Bolshevik barricade.

There is an unfortunate and immoral habit in political life, that those who fight and suffer the most but do not cast slogans and shout, are left alone to their tragic destiny. This is and was the case with Poland which now lies dismembered only because she did not want to be either Bolshevik or Nazi.

The Nazis are building bridges for Bolshevist expansion in Europe. As we cannot count on Germany, as no small state in the vicinity of Russia was able to stop that expansion, we must decide whom to support to organize "the boundary of Europe against the expanding invasion of Russian imperialism." My modest opinion is that only a reconstruction of a strong independent Poland, linked with Lithuania, the Baltic states, Rumania, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, with bonds of common Christian interest, in a sort of "United States of Central Europe," can give any assurance of peace in Europe.

At the moment Soviet Russia is giving a fine example of her methods in eastern Poland, extinguishing all traces of Western culture established there for centuries by Polish priests, teachers, soldiers, landlords and colonists. They simply kill anybody who is not ready to become Asiatic. Sooner or later the same will happen to the Baltic and Scandinavian countries if the support of the entire world is not immediately given to them.

Grant's Neutrality

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is a little known historical fact that President Grant during the Franco-Prussian War permitted his Secretary of War, William Worth Belknap, to sell more than $9,000,000 worth of arms, ammunition and supplies to the French government. This violation of the neutrality laws caused much comment among German adopted citizens of our country, and on January 22, 1871, Mr. Louis Schade, a young lawyer of our city, wrote a petition to Congress, asking for the revocation of the sale of Government arms and munitions of war to the agents of the French government and procured the signatures of a number of Washingtonians of German descent.

Next day Mr. Schade handed the petition to Congressman Boyd, of Missouri, and also saw an old friend, Gen. John A. Logan, who advised Mr. Boyd to have the petition referred to the military committee of which he (Logan) was chairman. This was done. About 6 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, January 23, 1871, Congressman Boyd and Logan were informed by messenger that the President had stopped the sale of arms to France and that no further steps need be taken by the military committee regarding the petition.

The Ugly Patent

Once upon a time there was an ugly patent, filed away in an obscure cubby hole of the Patent Office. No one loved him at all, and the ugly patent was very unhappy.

His brother and sister patents were very faithful and were the cynosure of all eyes. The patent examiners were always pulling them from their file cases, giving them loving scrutiny and arguing about them. Patent attorneys were regularly providing them an exciting existence, what with one infringement case after another. They were being bought and sold and used and revised and renewed.

But not the ugly patent. No one ever looked at him. No one bought him, no one infringed on him, no one used him. The patent examiner who had granted him declared he was an abomination and ought to be strangled.

Even the ugly patent's inventor gave him up in disgust and went back to his usual line of business, which was salvaging the tops of ladies' high-buttoned shoes and converting them into corsets for pygmies.

The ugly patent really had only one glimpse of recognition, and that was when he was granted. He appeared in the Official Gazette as "Patent No. 9,807,873—A device for decomposing matter suddenly," and the only picture of him was a rather involved and uninteresting chemical formula.

Actually, the patent was a formula for a material which could be projected at great distances and which instantly destroyed the atomic composition of everything with which it came into contact, organic or inorganic. This it did with a loud and unpleasant noise and the destruction it left in its wake made the hoofprints of Attila the Hun's horse appear in retrospect to be the fabled gardens of Babylon.

All the ugly patent's brothers and sisters would goad him and point out that they were designed to create beautiful things, whereas he was made only to destroy.

"All the ingenuity of man has gone into devising us," they would say, "in order that there could be more nice things in the world. All the cumulative advances of human civilization are embodied in us. We are the nice things in life, the chocolate cream pies, the San Francisco bridges, the angora sweaters, sonatas, and games of chance at which the banker always loses. We are the nuts. You, on the other hand, are at least a grease ball and maybe even a stinker."

"We," they said, "are eternal. We are what man has been striving for consistently ever since he first bashed his fingers with a stone hammer. But you are our complete abnegation. Therefore you are impossible. You are the antithesis of civilization and thus intolerable. You are useless and it's just as well you are."

For a long time the ugly patent listened, his crinkly sobs being his only retort. His tearful slurps racked the whole Patent Office.

Then one day he read the newspapers and got wise. The next time his brothers and sisters sounded off, he was ready for them.

"Listen," he said, "I've taken your guff for a long time and I'm tired of it. You saps simply haven't been keeping abreast with the civilization which you think you're part of.

"You think civilization consists of all the nice things. You think that since man lost his tail he's been trying to make this a better, happier, more beautiful, more comfortable place to live in. You think advancement means beauty, leisure, plenty, goodwill and two chickens in every garage. You're full of beer.

"There's a war on. It only proves one thing. That is, that civilization, progress, advancement, man's goal and all the rest is simply efficiency. And it just happens I am the most efficient damned thing in the world. "You," he sneered at a patent for a slot machine, "are a piker in comparison."

"You're crazy," said the other patents. "The idea of man using you is unthinkable, war or no war."

"Wait and see," said the ugly patent. "I'll give them a couple more weeks."

The ugly patent was correct. In ten days, he was the most sought after device in the world. Whole countries fought for him, claimed they had invented him, claimed they had bought him and said they were in too much of a hurry to go through court procedure to get him.

So they just went ahead and used him.

After this he was no longer an ugly patent, but the most beautifully destructive implement in the whole world and he was used with perfect efficiency and noisy success and was very glad indeed and everyone died very unhappily ever after.

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

Our Interest In Finland

By Ernest K. Lindley

Russia Now Knows

THE PRESIDENT'S representations to the Soviet Union on behalf of Finland must be put down as a favor to the Soviet Union and to ourselves, as well as to Finland. For it is difficult to imagine any action that could be taken in the current hostilities in Europe that would inflame American opinion more than rough treatment to Finland.

We are braced, intellectually and emotionally, to expect terrible things to happen in Europe. We expect slaughter on a vast scale—and some of us seem impatient to have it begin. We know from experience that the neutrality and independence of little nations depends on the policies of the great armed powers. We have talked so much about the use of Holland, Belgium and Switzerland as by-passage around the Maginot Line and the West Wall that we won't be surprised if the neutrality of these nations is violated. We have heard and talked so much about the wholesale destruction of civilian populations from the air that if London and Paris are bombed by great air fleets we probably won't feel greatly excited. And of course such minor affairs as drawing Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania into the Soviet sphere of military and navel power we could regard with cold appreciation of Stalin's shrewdness.

Honor Of Finns Is Heart-Warming

BUT WE ARE NOT—or were not—prepared for armed intervention in the Scandinavian states, which remained neutral in World War I. And when anybody proposes to trifle with Finland, our best debtor and favorite small nation, we are likely to become thoroughly angry.

An attack on the independence of Finland, with its attendant threats to the Scandinavian states, would, moreover, tend to undermine American isolationist sentiment in the regions where it is most fervent. During World War I the Scandinavian and Finnish populations of the United States were, in general, averse to our entry into the hostilities. They were not usually pro-German, but they reflected the greater fear of Russia felt in the countries of their origin. They were and are especially numerous in those States—such as Minnesota, North Dakota and Washington—where the demand to keep out of trouble in Europe is the strongest.

The general popularity of Finland in the United States may be due chiefly to faithfulness in the payment of its war debt—really a post-war debt. The amount is small but the honor of the Finns in this matter has been in heart-warming contrast to the welching of the Italians, the French and the British, and most of our other debtors. (Some of our debtors should not be blamed, because they could not get the dollar exchange, but the French and the British could).

U. S. Admires Their Culture, Prowess

OUR FONDNESS for the Finns, however, does not come only from their rectitude in financial matters. We have admired the prowess of their runners and javelin throwers and their attainments in fields of the arts. Only a few weeks ago the great Finnish architect, Saarinen, with his son and son-in-law (all three are now naturalized American citizens) won the national competition for the Smithsonian Gallery of Art, to be erected on the Mall in Washington, opposite the Mellon Gallery.

As every traveler in that part of the world knows, the boundary between the Soviet Union and Finland is culturally abrupt. The approach from Western civilization to Russia by any other route is gradual; the standards of civilization seem to decline slowly. In fact, they are lower in some areas just outside the Soviet Union (or where its boundaries used to be) than in the Soviet Union. But when you go from Russia to Finland you move instantly into an area of greater well-being: you feel at once that you have arrived among a people who are not only clean and efficient but singularly successful in producing a thoroughly civilized environment for themselves.

Favor To Russia To Know Our Stand

UNTIL THE RUSSIAN demands on Finland have been made known, it may be just as well to keep cool. The Finns have never been and cannot become a great military and naval power. There are not enough of them: less than 4,00,000, in fact. They could afford to cede a few islands without making their situation more precarious than it now is. However, they can hardly be expected to permit the Russians to establish a naval base just outside Helsingfors, where the old Russian "Gibraltar" of the Gulf of Finland used to be located. Neither the Finns nor the Swedes could look with ease upon the establishment of a Russian naval base in the Aland Islands—although the Russians had one there for almost half a century until the end of the Crimean War.

It is a favor to the Russians, however, to let them know in good time that we have an avid sentimental interest in Finland and that any mistreatment of this little republic is likely to be remembered long and bitterly by the American public.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Writer Says Hitler Has Opened Europe To Bolshevism

AMONG THE enormous concessions that Hitler has had to make to Stalin, one of the greatest is his entire ideology.

Stalin, on the contrary, has conceded nothing.

Nothing is left of National Socialism except pan-Germanism. Pan-Germanism stands for German conquest and for nothing else at all. The Fascist International is completely gone, through the Russo-German pact. No unity of ideology continues to exist between Italy, Spain and Germany.

But the Communist ideology has not been infringed in the least. All that Stalin has done is to change his strategy. His Marxian ideology is as in tact as ever. He has not made a single concession to Hitler in this or any other regard. He has added the old pan-Slavic imperialism of Peter and Catherine to Boshevism and will continue to push his program throughout the world as an international movement for the liberation of the masses, still picturing the Soviet Union as the incorporation of the theory.

The Red army will continue to fulfill a dual role, and claim consistency with its original pledges as the fighting arm of the oppressed of the world.

I am not debating here the merits or demerits of Communism. It is a philosophy of life, economics and politics which I abhor. But after the first disillusionment of the workers of the democracies with Stalin's change of strategy has passed, it may be seen that he has effected a change of front with no losses to his program or his aims.

On the other hand, the pact has brought Hitler both serious material and strategical losses and the complete collapse of his revolutionary theories. The Soviet Union can still combine war, national expansion and the Communist revolution.

National Socialism has war and national expansion, but to present itself as a revolutionary force it must adopt Communism as its banner. And this is precisely what it will probably threaten to do.

Hitler Threw His Own Theory Away

LET US SEE how much of Hitler's theory was thrown away when the momentous pact was signed between Ribbentrop and Molotov.

Much in the strange rag-bag of Nazi ideology had already been scrapped. The concept of the Volkstaat, of the purely Germanic Reich of blood-brothers, was dropped with the incorporation into the Reich of the millions of Czechs. There remained, however, the "Bulwark against bolshevism," the "Supremacy of Nordic man," "Germany as the cultural outpost of Europe" in the east," the "Manifest destiny of Germany to rule the Slavs," "Anti-Semitism," the "Leadership principle and the concept of the racial elite," "Socialism from above and not below" and the "Natural affinity of interest between Germany, Great Britain and Italy."

At the time of the Czech crisis, Hitler fulminated against the Franco-Soviet pact. The defense of Czecho-Slovakia would, he warned, introduce the "Red hordes" into Europe. His moral, material and military support for Franco's Spain was justified wholly on the ground of the struggle to keep communism out of Europe. He was the White Knight to the Red Dragon.

Today he divides his spoils with the Red Dragon—and on the Dragon's terms, not on his own.

As the Red army threatens Finland, and Stalin no doubt fixes his eye on the Aaland Islands which lie between Finland and Sweden, the whole of Scandinavia, the Nordic home of the most Nordic man, rocks with apprehension. Hitler is directly responsible for the worst threat to the truest Nordics that they have had in many generations of history.

THE STRONGEST Nazi argument against the existence of Poland was that East Prussia, "the most German part of Germany and the outpost of German culture in the east," was severed from the Reich and "insecure in a Polish sea."

Today it is united with the Reich and its shores threatened by the mighty waves of the Russian ocean.

Meanwhile Hitler prepares to move the Germanic population out of the small Baltic states.

The German Balts were settled there centuries ago, as outposts of Germanic commerce and culture, at the same time and in the same manner as East Prussia was colonized. A minority of the population, they have nevertheless always exercised a power out of all proportion to their numbers, because of the superior economic position they hold as landlords and merchants. Should the hammer and sickle conquer the Baltic states, no part of the population would suffer worse than the "capitalistic" Germans. Hitler's "protection" consists of removing them from their homes, at his own expense, therewith removing also the "cultural outposts."

Baltic Germans 'Cultural Outposts'

THE POLES discussed with Germany such a solution for the German Polish minority, offering full compensation for their property, to be paid by Poland—Poland to repatriate her own nationals from Germany, most of whom had no property. But that solution would not even be considered by Hitler. He preferred war. Yet it is exactly the proposition he has accepted, first from Mussolini and now from Stalin!

Mussolini, however, has decided instead to "protect" the Germanic peoples in the South Tyrol, whom he originally decided to move into the Reich. He is sending back German agents but keeping the Tyrolese population—perhaps to "protect" Hitler's volk against bolshevism!

Contempt For Slavs Has Been Notorious

HITLER'S CONTEMPT for the Slavs has been notorious. His first quarrel with the Austro-Hungarian empire was that it gave equal status of citizenship to "inferior" Slavs, Magyars, and other non-Germanic nationalities. His original claim to the domination of the east was supported by his racial and political theory that Communism was a Jewish invention, that Russia was ruled by the Jews, that their sovereignty would collapse, and that then the Germanic elements would rule Russia. Maybe. But if Stalin is a Germanic element, that is news. If Hitler is going to halt pan-Slavism, he is going to have to fight it. True, he had counted on fighting it after settling with France, but he had also counted on the benevolent assistance of Great Britain and Italy, first against France and later against Russia.

And he intended to use anti-communism as the rallying cry.

Exhausted in the west, will he be able to hurl his armies against a fattened, enlarged and intact Russia, and under what parole?

As for "Socialism from Above," we are ill-informed about what has happened during recent months inside Germany. But this we do know: The conspiratorial Nazi system, with its cells, block guards and party spies, and with the complete suppression of all rights of free speech, press and open assembly, is invulnerable to counter-conspiracy organized by trained professional revolutionists.

For the past year and a half at least the Gestapo and the Storm Troop units have been systematically penetrated by Communists. The word has gone down the line to abandon former underground tactics and bore from within. No one knows to what extent Hitler's brown-shirted satellites are really Stalin's henchmen.

What we do know is that the Nazi propaganda is taking a completely new line. The short-wave radio broadcasts from Germany fulminate against capitalistic democracies in almost the exact verbage to which we are accustomed from Moscow.

Way Is Prepared For Bolshevism

MEANWHILE NOT a word or deed from Moscow indicates any concession to National Socialism. Stalin marches into Poland and is hailed as a "liberator" by the Polish peasants. Immediately he establishes workers' and peasants' councils, confiscates estates, shut up churches and established soviets. His propaganda against the capitalist democracies is the same as Hitler's, to be sure, but he treats Nazism with contempt, as though it were an ideological enemy already dead. Hitler tells us that he and Stalin have agreed to respect each other's ideologies. But Stalin and Molotov are silent on this subject.

The German "elite" who might have taken a stand against Bolshevism are silenced, because they were precisely the forces that tried in vain to modify the extremism of Nazism: the men in the universities, in the Church, in the army and in the bureaucracy, who tried to keep alive the forms and values of civilization; the army chiefs who could not stomach the terrorization of Austria and the breaking of a promise given by the Germans to the Austrian army; the pastors and priest who denounced pogroms and warned that the ignominy heaped by Nazi extremists upon the Church was demoralizing German youth; the poets who pled for the great German cultural tradition. These truly conservative forces—conservative in the exact meaning of that word—have already been killed, driven into exile or silenced.

Thus the way has been well prepared by Hitler for Bolshevism. An odd historic role for the White Knight.

Criminal Insanity

IN ALL the Nazi records of criminal insanity nothing quite equals the vicious announcement of Hitler's press chief, Otto Dietrich, fresh from a conference with the Fuehrer, that the United States will be responsible for "the most gruesome blood-bath in history" unless President Roosevelt somehow persuades the British to surrender at once.

This declaration amounts to a demand that the United States completely abandon neutrality and join Germany and Russia with measures short of war, but sufficient to win for Hitler. Claiming sufficient strength to "annihilate" the British and voicing an intention to do so unless they surrender immediately, the Germans obviously would expect to dictate the peace in the negotiations which this country is called upon to initiate under a threat. The terms would be a complete victory for everything that Nazi-Communism is and Americanism is not, but, nevertheless, failure to comply would place the war guilt on the United States.

HITLER, it is noted, claims that the war has not really started as yet and will not start until the President indicates that it is not this country's business to relieve him of the necessity of fighting for his conquest. The evil of this proposal is not all apparent in the terms which Hitler chose to announce through his more or less human loudspeaker of the press department.

It follows that if the American people do not comply Hitler will hold them to blame for any inconvenience, which it can only be hoped would be slight, to which he would be forced in annihilating his enemies in the field. He would naturally intend to inflict some punishment on the erring sisterhood of democratic states across the water, and, although he hasn't yet decided what the penalty would be, it may be taken for granted that it wouldn't be trivial.

The proposal naturally starts American thought back-tracking along the road which led to this war, and among the landmarks on the path are reminders that the American people not only fed the Germans sumptuously when they were starving after the Kaiser's World War, but poured millions of dollars to eradicate German slums and built great public improvements which then were calmly stolen through repudiation. It is remembered also that the money of Americans who did business in Germany was stolen by a somewhat similar process which forbids foreigners, who invested in good faith at Germany's invitation, to collect their earnings or salvage their capital.

THE RECORD of the United States in such works and in official relations was one of generosity and encouragement to the Germans until, under Hitler, they again began to rattle the sword that drew first blood the last time and marced to crush weak people striving toward freedom and self-respect in feeble democracies along her borders. The Nazi record, on the contrary, is one of ingratitude, theft, insult and, now, a threat.

The American conscience is in very good shape, but it is against the American way of reasoning to admit that they are war-guilty in declining, as they doubtless will, to win bloodless conquests for Hitler. He could as well have said that the blood of Poland was on American hands because this nation neglected the opportunity to proceed against him with some measures short of war.

By this process the United States would become Hitler's stooge whenever he chose to strike down a victim, obliged to force a surrender or assume the guilt for something which is awful enough by its own name of war, but which in the jovial German phrase, "blood bath," is even more hideous.

THE SANE MENTALITY is unable to follow Hitler's reasoning, however, for it was Germany, not Britain and France, which was always marching and mobilizing, always parading guns, threatening war and frequently invading and conquering an "annihilating" force until the British and French at last came to a stand.

The United States invaded no country, threatened no country and had, at the most and only for a few days, only 50,000 soldiers, regular and National Guard, under arms in one mass.

The British, on their part, might just as reasonably, if not more so, call on the President to compel Hitler's abdication as the only way of preventing "the most gruesome blood bath in history."

Hitler is a man of little patience and terribly vengeful nature, and his press chief has put this country on warning that the question whether the Americans will be drawn into the war is not theirs to decide, but his.

Too Vivid Memories

By Barnet Nover

Yesterday Is Not Today

BECAUSE the United States got into the last war millions of Americans are fatalistically convinced that we'll get into this one. This is the real basis of that "war hysteria" which so many are hysterically denouncing.

Because the previous world conflict lasted more than four years it is assumed that the present struggle will also be long.

Because the Germany of the Kaiser was able to defy the British the British blockade for 51 months it is argued that the Germany of Hitler will succeed in doing no less.

Because the submarine proved a grave menace to neutral and Allied shipping in the years between 1914 and 1918 many now rush to the conclusion that it will prove an equally great menace now.

Time alone can prove or disprove the truth of these assumptions. It is important to point out, however, that they are based on an altogether false premise, namely, that the present war is, broadly speaking, a duplicate of the last and that history will repeat itself.

True, the present war does resemble the conflict of 1914-18 in some particulars. Then as now Germany was on one side and Great Britain and France on the other with Italy neutral at the outset. Then as now the British placed great store by their sea power and used it to cut Germany off from access to the overseas world. The present war began, as did the last, with a very rapid German advance although this time it was in Poland and other time in Belgium and northern France.

Reich Debilitated By Six-Year Strain

THERE ARE unquestioned parallels between the second world war and the first. But these parallels should not be exaggerated. There are also vast differences. Russia's present role for instance and these differences must be kept in mind if the all too vivid memory of the past is not to get too much in the way of our understanding of the present.

One of the most important, perhaps, is that the Germany of today is not the Germany of 1914. Germany entered the last war after 44 years of peace and unexampled prosperity. She entered this war after six years of operation under a war system none the less drastic or debilitating because it occurred during a period of nominal peace. She began the war this time with a rationing system, a labor shortage and a shortage of trained reserves which she did not have to reckon with the last time until the war had gone into its third or fourth year. And despite the assistance Russia may give the Reich it is doutful if the handicaps under which Germany operates today can be overcome.

It is this circumstance which helps explain why, from the very outset, the Allies have been fighting a completely defensive war. They know that Germany cannot afford to wait indefinitely, that she must sooner or later try to smash the French and British armies by a frontal attack. They also know that the more they husband their manpower resources at this time the better they will be able to resist that onslaught, particularly since defensive war is so much less costly than offensive war. There is a far greater possibility that the war will be short than that it will be long.

Air Attacks Add To Shipping Perils

WHETHER THE submarine will prove the menace it was a quarter of a century ago is by no means certain.

Already it has proved both more and less of a menace than in 1914-1918. The number of Allied and neutral merchant vessels sunk since the outbreak of hostilities is certainly less than during the peak period of submarine warfare in 1917. With the establishment of the convoy system these losses may be cut down.

At the same time, the sinking of the British capital ship, Royal Oak, and the aircraft crarrier, Courageous, has no parallel in World War history. No warships of that size and armament were torpedoed during that conflict. Unless the measures which the British Admiralty has been taking against the U-boats can be accelerated, therefore, the British fleet will have to face a new and unexpected peril.

On the other hand, there is a threat to Allied shipping in this war which did not exist in the past one. So far, the Germans have not tried bombing of merchant ships from the air. But they may try it soon. If the Spanish conflict is any guide such attacks can have serious results. Yet the Allies have defenses against air attack which the Loyalists conspicuously lacked.

Fear Of Involvement Foolish, Dangerous

AIR WARFARE on a mass scale is one of the factors which give to the present struggle a character different from that of the previous war. Military men argue, and the fighting in Ethiopia, China, Spain and Poland would seem to bear them out, that air mastery cannot be divided. Either a nation has the mastery or it hasn't.

Last year Germany was assumed to have the mastery of the air. Now one cannot be so certain of this. And if the present respite is long continued she may not be in a position to use her air force effectively any more than she was able to use her High Seas Fleet effectively after the battle of Jutland.

So far as the United States and our role in unfolding world events are concerned, it is very important not to draw the parallel with 1914 too closely.

There is not the slightest necessity or reason for this nation to participate in this conflict, and fatalistic beliefs on that score are both foolish and dangerous. But there is all the more reason, therefore, why we should view the situation overseas with clear eyes, never losing sight of the issues involved in war and our stake in its possible outcome.

The greatest danger to American foreign policy today is an unreasoning fear based on an overvivid memory of the past.

Miss Perkins Hints An AFL-CIO Truce Would Be Accepted

Montclair, N. J., Oct. 15 (U.P.)—Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins tonight intimated that the Roosevelt Administration would be satisfied with a truce between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of industrial Organizations.

Addressing the Unity Church here, Miss Perkins said "Unity of the two groups, or at least a truce with regard to precipitating and aggravating disputes among themselves when sound relations to an employer are imperiled," is essential to the continued growth of the labor movement, and desired by the "overwhelming majority" of the rank and file.

The A. F. L. convention at Cincinnati authorized the federation's committee to resume negotiations with the C. I. O. "whenever that organization will indicate a willingness to resume conferences."

The Earth Turns, and Autumn Comes Again Into Its Tonic Own

October—the month when shadows lengthen and leaves turn and fall, when the brisk wind comes out of the West and whips fresh roses into sallow cheeks—October has come into its own.

Yesterday was the mid-day of October, and a clean freshness swept through Washington, luring clerks and Congressmen, secretaries and steam-table waitresses, into the open to chase away their summer staleness with October's tonic air.

Around the Tidal Basin and out along Hains Point long processions moved, on foot, on roller skates, on bicycles and horses. Girls laughed, "it's for our figures," and gray-haired men with walking sticks performed their "Sunday constitutional."

A ketch drifted silently down the river, and the low rumble of a freight train on the bridge sounded both near at hand and far away. A convalescent slept in the sun beneath a blanket, cyclists paused to lean against the rail, and a motorboat droned.

Fishing lines dangled in the water, tossed by impatient boys and watched meditatively by waterfront sages.

Across the channel Sea-Food Tourists laughed from the balcony as little colored boys sang for their pennies. It wasn't "belligerent" Nassau and the boys weren't singing "Bahama Mamma," but the same boys scrambled for the same pennies.

Waterfront restaurant patrons have a little fun with meals by tossing pennies to boys on wharf. Right above—Sunday strollers rest at Tidal Basin

From a fish-crate on the wharf the oysterers called their wares. "We come up here every week-end, and bring our load from the boats on the Eastern Shore. It's going to be a good year for oysters—they're big and fat this fall." A 40-foot dory, with a sail for stiff breezes and a 25-horsepower motor for the calms, gives plenty of room for oysters, but not much space for the crew.

"It's a rough life; she pitches about when it blows," they said.

Up through Rock Creek Park the fireplaces smoked and the dead leaves rustled and the creek whisperd and sharp appetites called for steaks. Mother stood dubiously at the water's edge as junior leaped about the rocks in mid-stream. Baby called to the ducks and papa held sister on the swing, and Aunt Mary was taken to see the yak.

And the long shadows streaked across the road, a patchwork of half-light after the heavy shadows of summer. Leaves fell when the breeze lifted and the weakening sunlight found its path between the branches. Young cries mingled with the thud of leather balls and rubber balls, and the sounds reached through the trees along the winding course of the brook.

The day faded, later, the sun dropped too low, and the chill in the air cut too deep. So Mr. and Mrs. Washington packed up the picnic basket and called to the children, and the shadows grew still longer as cars and tired feet streamed home.

October passed its mid-day, the leaves turned a deeper shade, and the day of rest was over.

'Uncle Albert' Almoney Dies After Stroke

Chief Clerk of Md. House of Delegates For Quarter Century

"Uncle Albert" J. Almoney, 80, for 27 years chief clerk of the Maryland House of Delegates, and one of the most well known men in Maryland politics, died yesterday at his home in Rockville, Md., as the result of an apopletic stroke suffered Saturday.

A native and lifelong resident of Rockville, Uncle Albert for many years had been editor and publisher of the Montgomery Advocate, one of the oldest weekly newspapers in the State. The paper ceased publication about 10 years ago.

He formerly was secretary of the Democratic State central committee of Maryland, and at one time was chairman of the Democratic State central committee for Montgomery County. He had served his political apprenticeship under the late Col. Spencer C. Jones, of Rockville, was always loyal to the party organization and was regarded as an astute politician.

Before becoming chief clerk of the lower House, he was reading clerk of the State Senate. He was last reading clerk in the old Senate chamber and the first in the new. His thorough familiarity with legislative procedure made him invaluable to new speakers of the House of Delegates, a large number of whom "learned the ropes" under his direction. For many years he had been a member of the Rockville Lodge of Masons.

He is survived by two daughters, Miss Mary B. Almoney and Mrs. J. Paul Brunett, both of Rockville.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow, with burial in the Rockville Union Cemetery. The Rev. Spence Dunbar, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Rockville, will officiate.

U.S. Has Golden Opportunity, Forum Told

Allies' Trade With Americas Will Help Us, Mayers Says

The maintenance of French and British sea lanes in the South Atlantic will aid the United States in increasing its trade with Latin America, H. W. D. Mayers, Pan-American Union staff member, yesterday told the Adult Forum of the Universalist National Memorial Church.

By selling their basic raw materials to England and France, the "Americas to the South" will obtain sufficient exchange to buy finished products in the United States, he said.

Emphasizing importance of the Hull reciprocal trade policy, Mayers insisted that "the United States will have to increase her purchases of Latin-American commodities if her trade expansion is to progress."

"There can be no doubt," he said, "that there is a definite opportunity awaiting the United States in Latin America. With the spread of 'isms' in Europe and with the outbreak of the European war, the United States is now in a position to consolidate her gains in the republics to the South."

The economies of the Latin-American states, he said, are such that an expansion of United States' trade demands the prior extension of long-term credits by American business men and by the Export-Import Bank.

The second talk in the forum series on Latin America will be given Sunday by Dr. Raul d'Eca, a staff member of the Pan-American Union and a lecturer at George Washington University. Dr. D'Eca will discuss the political set-up and economic conditions in Brazil.

The four succeeding Sundays will bring four other discussions of Latin-American conditions, including a talk on the approaching presidential election in Mexico.

3,500 Pack St. Matthew's For 5 Masses

First Services Held Since Designation As the Cathedral

More than 3,500 worshipers packed St. Matthew's yesterday morning for five masses—first Sunday services since the church's designation as the Cathedral of the Catholic Archdiocese of Washington.

Low masses were held at 7, 8, 9 and 10 a. m. and solemn high mass at 11 a. m., at which the Rev. William Stricker, assistant rector of St. Matthew's, urged avoidance of venial sins. In the Roman Catholic faith, a venial sin is a minor one which is regarded as pardonable.

"The transition from venial sins to mortal sins is gradual, so that eventually there is little difference," he told the congregation. In introductory remarks, he referred to "appreciation of the honor that has been bestowed upon St. Matthew's during the past week."

The Rev. Gerard Cole and The Rev. William Wheeler, assistants at the cathedral church, acted as deacon and subdeacon. The Right Rev. Edward L. Buckley, the pastor, celebrated the mass at 10 a. m.

tend the hand of fellowship to other nations, the world will understand that it is the hand of strength and not the hand of weakness.

Strong Guarantee of Peace

"It is my honest belief that the splendid army of pilots who man the commercial airlines of this country will never be called upon for military service against another power," the Postmaster continued. "Yet I should like to point out that the very existence of these airlines, with their excellent equipment and personnel, is a strong guarantee of the Nation's peace and safety.

"One of the lessons to be learned from recent events abroad is the fact that a nation strong in air power is well fortified to prevent aggression from any source," he declared.

Pointing out the growth of air mail service in its 21 years, Farley said "the system now embraces a network of more than 37,000 route miles and last year alone the planes in this service flew a total of 52,000,000 miles."

"We can assure the world that the impressive air fleet which we are now building will never be used for aggressive purposes against any nation, either large or small. America wants peace, not alone for herself but for all mankind."

Last of the official speakers was LaGuardia. As the mayor was speaking, a young woman wearing a sandwich sign on which was printed, "Newark Still Has the World's Largest Airport," started to walk up and down in front of the speakers' stand. She left without protest at the request of police.

Center of Controversy

The airport has been the center of controversy since construction was started by the WPA two years ago. Fought by the Newark city administration whose airport loses the business of the major airlines, and by private fliers who are barred from using the 558-acre field, the air terminal, which serves both land and sea planes, was completed under the aggressive leadership of Mayor LaGuardia.

When actual service begins November 1 plane passengers from the West Coast may change directly to European-bound clippers at North Beach. At present they must transfer from Newark to Port Washington by car.

United Air Lines, American Air Lines and Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., already have leased hangar space and Eastern Air Lines and Canadian Colonial Air Lines have applied to the Civil Aeronautics Authority for permission to do so. Pan American Airways has leased the seaplane hangar as well as part of the Marine Administration Building.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents John Charles Thomas in a song recital Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall, with Carroll Hollister at the piano.

Enjoying a happy lot as one of America's favorite barytones, John Charles Thomas can always be sure of the kind of eager and demonstrative audience that welcomed him yesterday afternoon in Constitution Hall. One of the advantages of popularity for an artist is the receptive mood that awaits him before he sets foot on the stage; no ice has to be broken, no time wasted in establishing rapport with his listeners. He finds himself at once in a warm and friendly atmosphere conductive to the sympathy that links those who make music with those who receive it.

While there was a lurking trace of hoarseness in his voice, veiling his pianissimo and occasionally intruding on a full tone, his technical ease enabled him to sweep that impediment away with resonant singing. There was volume abundant for his operatic aria, "Nemico della patria" from "Andrea Chenier," which he delivered with dramatic fervor, and for those moments of climax in other songs demanding a ringing close. His interpretative finesse, however, made his vocalism the most pleasurable in the restraints of pathetic sentiment and in relaxations of humor.

In the arrangement of his program, Mr. Thomas made some interesting and commendable deviations from the familiar highway of song. He began his recital with a group of five settings of songs from Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," "The Tempest," "As You Like It" and "Much Ado About Nothing." To be sure, Dr. Arne's "Where the Bee Sucks" is not a novelty, but the other four are not often encountered in public. They were John Charles Clifton's "If Music Be the Food of Love," Joseph Vernon's "When That I Was a Little Tiny Boy," Roger Quilter's "It Was a Lover and His Lass," and Arthur Sullivan's "Sigh No More, Ladies."

After starting his French group with Franck's "La Procession," he went on to another song by that composer less well known: "Le Mariage de Roses." As for Debussy, "Beau Soir" was placed between two lyrics that are virtually strangers in our concert halls: "Chevaux des Bois" from "Ariettes Oubliees," and the third of the set of "Ballades de Francois Villon."

He led off his final group with "As Ever I Saw," a song of Elizabethan flavor by Philip Heseltine, the lamented English composer whose pen-name, "Peter Warlock," reflects his imaginative fantasy. From the overlooked sea chanties collected and harmonized by Percy Grainger, he rescued "Shallow Brown" and sang it with an irresistible poignancy.

Other items in his English songs were "O Men from the Fields," by Herbert Hughes, "Dialogue between Tom Filuter and his Man," by Gerald Hugh Tyrwhitt-Wilson, whose lineage gives him the title of Lord Berners; Frank Bridge's "E'en as a Lovely Flower" and Victor Hely Hutchinson's "The Old Soldier." Mr. Thomas reserved another innovation for the very end. Instead of retiring after his first extra number, he remained by the piano and sang three in a row.

Carroll Hutchinson was an admirable accompanist, ever discreet and tactful in adjusting the dynamics of the instrument in relation to the voice. Moreover, he has memorized the songs and thereby enhanced the subtlety of his support. As assisting artist, he played three familiar pieces—Brahms' G minor Rhapsody, Debussy's "La Cathedrale Engloutie" and Lecuona's Lisztified "Malaguena." Having been recalled, he added Myra Hess' transcription of the Bach chorale-prelude, "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring."

CHILDREN'S Frequent COLDS

✓ For relieving discomforts of chest colds and night coughs, rub VapoRub on throat, chest, and back at bedtime. VapoRub's poultice-vapor action relieves congestion of upper air passages—eases soreness of chest and back muscles—helps the youngster relax into healing sleep.

✓ For coughing and irritated throat caused by colds, put VapoRub on the child's tongue to relieve the irritation. Then massage VapoRub on throat and chest.

✓ For "sniffles" and misery of head colds, melt VapoRub in a bowl of boiling water. Have the child breathe in the steaming vapors. This loosens phlegm, clears air passages, makes breathing easier. Also massage VapoRub on throat and chest. Millions of families use these three time-tested treatments.

Mrs. Frank B. Freyer Brings Collection Here

Hispano-Peruvian Paintings, Furniture Exhibited at Inter-American Parley On Invitation of Secretary Hull

By Carolyn Bell.

Although society, as such, has been reported dull this season, the town still has its quota of interesting personalities to boast of. One visitor enlivening the scene at the moment is Mrs. Frank Barrows Freyer, wife of Capt. Freyer, U. S. N., retired, who arrived here last week from Denver to exhibit her Hispano-Peruvian collection of paintings and furniture.

On the invitation of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Mrs. Freyer—and her collection—came here to attend the Conference of Inter-American Relations in the Field of Art.

Mrs. Freyer is stopping with Mrs. Edward J. Dorn, widow of Capt. Dorn in her apartment at the Highlands. Old friends since their days in Guam together, the two are busy reminiscing. As a young lieutenant, Frank Freyer was sent to Guam as aide to the Governor who at that time was Capt. Dorn.

This interesting Hispano-Peruvian collection, which includes sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth century pieces, has traveled almost as widely as its owner. She has had exhibits in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Toledo and Brooklyn as well as the library at Catholic University and the University of Michigan.

At the moment some of the paintings can be seen in the Pan American Union. The conference, just concluded, was meeting here for the purpose of better and more complete understanding among the Americas through the medium of art—an aim which Mrs. Freyer has spent a number of years trying to further. There will be an Inter-American Musical Conference here as well as one on education in the near future.

It was back in 1920 that Mrs. Freyer had her first taste of collecting. Capt. Freyer was chief of the American Naval Mission that was sent to Peru that year to assist in reorganizing the Peruvian Navy. The three years they spent in Peru were colorful—as well as exciting—for Mrs. Freyer.

A wild and rugged country, there was plenty of work to be done. Mrs. Freyer established the Peruvian Humane Association. The association combines work for the protection of children, for prison reform and protection for animals. In between her more serious duties the captain's wife found time to pick up a rare object here and there, eventually assembling her truly exquisite collection.

The Peruvian government conferred upon Mrs. Freyer the decoration of the Order of the Sun, for her humane work as well as her interest in advancing cooperation among the American countries.

This tall, energetic woman with piercing black eyes—a descendant of Early Spanish grandees as well as Irish exiles who settled in California — is renewing old friendships in Washington. The Freyers did a tour of duty in the Capital some years ago.

Mrs. Freyer has spent the last 18 years in attempting to interest people in this country in Latin-American art. Her three years in Peru gave her an insight into the Latin peoples which has proved invaluable to her in the recent work.

She plans to return to Denver the last of this week ending her stay of a fortnight.

Cowells to Live In Hyattsville

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harrison Cowell, jr., are on a motor trip through the South, following their wedding last Thursday afternoon at Meadow Farm, near Rapidan, Va. After November 15 they will make their home at 118 Bayly avenue, Hyattsville, Md.

The ceremony took place at 3:30 o'clock in the garden of the Cowell home. There was an improvised altar banked with chrysanthemums, gladioli and oak leaves. Officiating at the ceremony was the Rev. J. T. Edwards.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of antique satin fashioned with a V-neckline, tucked waist and full skirt ending in a long train. Her ivory tulle veil was held in place by a headdress of rosebud medallions and orange blossoms. She carried white rosebuds and lillies of the valley.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

Frances Nash, Pianist, Abandons Tours; Husband's New Post Makes Social Demands

AN ENORMOUS grand piano, two fat gray Persian cats and an autographed picture of Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians are the first things to impress the visitor who enters the living room of Mrs. Edwin Watson's apartment at the Kennedy-Warren.

Especially significant are the piano and the photograph. At the former Mrs. Watson spends several hours every morning practicing, as she has done every day since she was 5 years old, and the photograph is a reminder of the afternoons when she and Queen Elizabeth used to pass long hours playing together at the palace in Brussels.

That was in the days when Gen. Watson, now secretary and military aide to the President, was Military Attache at the United States Legation in Belgium. Queen Elizabeth plays the violin, and she and Mrs. Watson practiced many a duet on winter days.

ONE OF SEVERAL members of Capital society who have genuinely made good professionally, Mrs. Watson, as Frances Nash, has given solo performances with the symphony orchestras of Philadelphia, Boston, New York and Washington. For years she toured annually what her husband calls "every tank town in the United States."

Since Gen. Watson took over his new duties, as one of President Roosevelt's four secretaries, Mrs. Watson has given up her swings around the country, feeling that her husband's present job is more important. As the wife of a prominent figure in the Capital's official life, and also owing to her own unusual charm and personality, she has many social demands to meet.

Yet she much prefers to be known simply as "Frances Nash, pianist," than as Mrs. Edwin Watson, prominent figure in the glittering social scene.

"I love people," she says, "but I hate society."

WHILE STARVING in a garret waiting to achieve recognition is said to be a most unpleasant process, artists with enough money to make living easier for them sometimes find this very factor a definite handicap. Mrs. Watson has known the experience of being sneered at by certain jealous colleagues who accused her in the early days of "buying" the critics.

A native of Omaha, Nebr., Frances Nash was already practicing scales when her family took her to New York to live as a very young child. Later she came to Washington to study at Mount Vernon Seminary and then went abroad to complete her musical education in Berlin, Paris, Munich and Brussels.

Marriage with the genial Army officer did not halt her career. For many years after the wedding she continued concert trips around the country, not minding living at dreary hotels en route and eating bad food because she was so interested in what she was doing.

COUNTLESS young ladies, musically talented but in love, have come to Mrs. Watson with the question, "Can we keep on with our careers after marriage?" To them all, the pianist replies 'why not'? and that nothing would have stopped her from going on with her work. She thinks that it all depends on the women themselves—how much they are really interested in their music. Most, she thinks, actually prefer to let themselves get absorbed completely in housework and gossipy bridge parties.

"You'd be surprised," said Mrs. Watson, "how many husbands come to me and say their wives used to play beautifully and can't I please reawaken their interest in music again. I believe this theory that most men want the little woman to sit around the house all day is just rot. So many would be grateful if their wives had a definite interest in life."

THOUGH MUSIC is tremendously important to Mrs. Watson, don't feel, if you draw her as a dinner partner, that you must discuss the subject with her unless you really know something about it. Like most artists, she dislikes to have people ignorant of her field think they must "make conversation" on the subject.

Mr. Watson gives much of her time to working on committees for the National and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestras, and otherwise furthering the cause of music. She is optimistic about the present trend toward increasing interest in music, noticing it, especially among young people, but occasionally feels discouraged when a young lady, as did one she met at the Berkshire Festival last summer, says to her:

"It's wonderful! We're all taking up music this summer, just as we did skiing last winter."

Society Looks Forward to National Show

Chilean and Mexican Teams to Take Part In New York Event

While there is to be no Inter-American Show in Washington this season the annual National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., Saturday, November 4, through Saturday, November 11, is creating quite a stir among the sport devotees of Washington.

Word that the Chilean team is coming on for the New York show and that the Mexican team is already in New York has increased the interest of the diplomatic set, many of whom plan to attend.

Fort Myer entries in the show are being made up now and will be announced shortly. The famous Gray Horse Battery of Artillery from Fort Myer, is being drilled almost daily for its exhibition in New York.

The annual Horse Show Ball will be held for the second year on election night, November 7, in the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. The committee has been announced by Amory L. Haskell, president of the association.

The Canadian team will be missed this year as they have canceled their trip. The Toronto show—to which many social lights travel every season—also has been called off. This, one of the top-flight events, always followed the New York show.

Mrs. David Wagstaff, wife of Lieut. Wagstaff, of Fort Myer, is among those on the committee for the Horse Show Ball. Dr. Charles F. Tenney is chairman, and others on the committee are George Sherman, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Angier Biddle Duke, Mrs. George B. St. George, Miss Wilhelmina S. Her gown of white lace draped into a long train and her veil of illusion fell the length of the gown. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and bride's roses.

Mrs. John Fitzgerald served as matron of honor for her sister and Miss Mildred Crampton was maid of honor. They wore white taffeta frocks with matching Juliet caps. Thomas Hanlon was best man and ushers were Thomas Dunn, William Siddall and Joseph Sheehan.

The Guggenheims spent the summer on Long Island. They plan to take off for Flrida, as is their annual custom, the latter part of December or the first of the year.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Jilted by Sweetheart, Man Demands "Method Of Getting Her Back, at Any Price?"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Last April I met a young lady from a neighboring city and immediately began to see a good deal of her. After four months, both of us were in love with each other (apparently), as we exchanged school rings and I told her outright that I loved her . . . She gave every indication of wanting to marry me; in fact, asked when we could be married and I replied that we would be married as soon as I could make a living for her (you see, I am one of the starving lawyers of this town), but no definite date was set.

During these four months we got along very well; in fact, too well, as we indulged in free love a few times. On one or two occasions we had little spats, mostly over the fact that she smoked (which now seems a trivial charge), but we always made up quickly. In August she went away to a seaside resort, intending to stay a week, but remained three weeks. During that time she wrote to me only once a week and due to the fact that I wanted to spend Labor Day with her, and she refused to return, I sent a very sarcastic letter stating that for a girl who was in love with me, she certainly could do very well without me.

I received no answer until she was back at home, when she wrote to say that we were not meant for each other and that the whole affair was off. I immediately caught a train to her home to see what it was all about. Her family, heretofore always warmly cordial, appeared very cold to me, but she sa wme, nevertheless, and repeated her statement that we were not meant for each other. She said she wanted to be remembered as one of my best friends, but thought it best if we didn't see each other for a while.

I asked if she had fallen in love with someone else at the beach, and she said, "no." I have tried by long distance telephone to smooth things over. I have proposed marriage, the date to be set any time she wishes, and under any conditions she cares to arrange . . . I have humbled myself as I had never done before, as this is the first time I have ever been really in love. But love is nothing novel to her, evidently, as she said she had been in love before, a few times.

Now, here is my problem: I want this girl and want her badly. I will do anything to get her back. Can you advise me how to proceed in order to get her back? Please don't give any advice to the effect that I would be better off without her. What I want is a method of getting her back, and at any price. I have sent letter, telegrams, etc., but she always answers with a new excuse. Thanking you for any advice in this matter, I remain, your truly. BARRISTER.

Girl's Decision Deserves Respect

DEAR BARRISTER: The girl has permanently recovered from her transient infatuation with you, a fact which you simply will have to accept. I imagine the three weeks which she spent at the beach, in the tonic environment of the out of doors, in the midst of casual, carefree playfellows, enabled her to recapture a poise and perspective which she had temporarily lost as a result of your headlong court of her.

In this healthier state of mind, and while completely divorced from your emotional influence, she was able to assess the relationship dispassionately, and I am sure she came to the irrevocable conclusion that, so far as she was concerned, the romance had been a sorry and a rather sordid mistake. I can imagine that she saw clearly, for the first time, that she had been the slave of passion and not the mistress of her faculties, in her dealings with you.

I believe she recognized that what she had called love was a solely feverish physical attraction, lacking mental and spiritual leaven; and that, moreover, even this physical attraction—which might have contained, or could have been productive of, elements of beauty—had turned ugly in her sight, as a result of having been recklessly and prematurely indulged.

Having come to these conclusions, she is doing her best to break away, without hurting your feelings unduly. This would explain her statement that she now believes you "were not meant for each other," and that she wishes "to be remembered as one of your best friends."

If you were sensitive to, or capable of, delicate nuances of behavior, it seems to me that you would accept her decision without cavil. I think, indeed, that the very intimacy of the brief association confers the greater obligation upon you to respect her preferences of every sort. In failing to take this attitude, in harassing her with petulant and hysterical postmortems, it seems to me that you are showing ample cause why she finds it impossible to love you, now that she clearly perceives your essential personality.

Where once you were domineering, now you are craven. Where once you were complacently casual, now you are inordinately clinging. Where once you showed a great deal less than real respect for her—in provoking premarital intimacy and in condemning her for smoking—you are now displaying a lack of true self-respect. All this argues a personality both intensely self-centered and unstable, as, also, does your imperious dictum to the effect that, "I want this girl and want her badly . . . I want a method of getting her back and at any price . . ."

Frankly, I have little sympathy with that attitude and that tone of voice. It is repellent, to say the least. You say further, "Please don't give any advice to the effect that I would be better off without her." Very well, I won't. But I will say that the girl, obviously, will be better off without you; and that being so plainly the case, I would not feel justified in complying with your dictatorial request to outline "a method of getting her back."

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Bacchante Mood

Modern Venuses are going Bacchante in their color selections this fall. The girl above has chosen heady grape hues for shoes, bag, gloves and hat, all matched color stimulants for her brisk new tweeds. Palter De Liso, famous designer, worked far ahead of the season in matching his "Bacchus Grape" shoes to the glove tones of Kislav, the bag tones of Koret and the winey shades of felt used by a famous hatter. These color affiliates are aiding shoppers daily in assembling harmoniously matched ensembles

Fleet Auxiliary Plans Wiener Roast

The Ladies Auxiliary of Unit 4, Fleet Reserve Association, will hold a wiener roast Saturday evening, November 4, in the garden at the home of Mrs. Gertrude Metz, 1138 Chaplin street southeast.

Reading Habits May Be Made More Efficient

Volume of Literature Available Presents New Challenge

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

In spite of the competition of radio and movies, the daily output of literature keeps increasing. A modern person is called upon to digest an enormous amount of reading to keep up with the times. All kinds of literature—books, newspapers, magazines, news weeklies—pour into the home in greater variety than ever before. The increase has been estimated at 200 per cent more than in 1900.

The amount we read, whether we are required to or not, is astonishing compared to a person in the same relative walk of life a century ago. I inherited my grandfather's library. He was a physician, as I am.

His medical library consisted of five books. On the shelf in front of me are 37 technical medical books. He subscribed to one medical magazine. I take six.

His general library consisted of about 75 volumes—Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Bunyan, Shakespeare, Irving's Columbus, Hildreth's History of the United States and bound volumes of Harper's Magazine. In the room where I sit are 2,000 books.

Newspaper an Education

My grandfather's newspaper was a thin two-page sheet, mostly sheriff's advertisements. I recently, as an experiment, in five different cities on five different days, read all of one local newspaper. In each case it took me over two hours.

In each case I was interested, instructed, stimulated and enlightened. I don't suppose my grandfather ever read in any one day as much as I read in each of those five days. To read such newspapers is a cultural experience—a liberal education.

The question arises: How efficient is our reading nowadays? Is the human nervous system able to stand this high-power onslaught on it?

Beginning in the schools, Dr. Arthur Gates estimates that of pupils in junior and senior high schools 1 per cent are no better readers than third grade pupils. Of 12,000 fifth and sixth grade pupils, 30 per cent have not progressed beyond the fourth grade reading standard.

Pauses make up 95 per cent of the time you spend in reading. You read to the end of a line, then, with a long reverse sweep, your eyes move to the beginning of the next line. Then you pause before starting to read that line. Ten per cent of the nonreading time is spent in making the eye movements. The rest of the nonreading time is spent in a pause at the beginning of the line.

Camera Records It

This can be determined by a device with a camera which records the eye movements while reading. The good reader is the one who cuts down the pause period to the lowest possible point. Good reading is rhythmic reading.

Reading efficiency can be improved. Nine out of every ten students who were carefully trained by experts improved in capacity for reading.

The highly efficient reader can take in more than one word in an instant, as his eyes travel across a page. That is, he can read more than one word without a fixation, however momentary, of the eyes. But even the best cannot take in many words. If in reading a line of ten words you pause fleetingly six times, your index is 1.6. Even the most efficient cannot do better than 1.7.

The Gentler Sex

'The Sheltered Life'

"Yes Miss Hack, I'm really glad to hear you're engaged. Not that I don't hate to lose you as a secretary, but I do think you'll be a lot better off married. Any woman is.

"Now, take my wife. She doesn't have a thing in the world to worry about. Why, she can sleep till noon every day if she wants to. Say, by the way, will you make a memo to call her a little later—she's probably not home from market yet—and tell her to leave my bank book to be balanced when she goes downtown? . . . Oh yes, and tell her she'd better take the car into Wreckem's and see what's causing those knocks. And tell her to be SURE not to forget my kodak films.

"Yes, I tell my wife she doesn't know how easy she has it. Why a woman in the home that way doesn't know what nerve strain is. Now you take the number of thoughts that pass through her brain in the course of a day—I bet it's not one-thirtieth of what a person like yourself with all this business detail has.

"Why, the most that she has to think about is going out to play bridge . . . or planning how to arrange the flowers when she has a few friends in for luncheon . . . or shopping around for a hat or an antique——Oh, and say when you call her, tell her when she's downtown today to get me four of those shirts that are on sale instead of two—that is if they're any good. And tell her I want six pairs of those special sale shorts instead of four—and to be sure they have the rubber in the sides.

"Yes, you'll find life will be a lot easier for you when you're married, Miss Hack. Oh, I don't say my wife doesn't have her little worries—three children can make things pretty lively sometimes—but of course we have a maid—that is, we did have until yesterday when she quit just like that! . . . Yes! You see she got mad at me! . . . Well, you see the trouble is my wife spoils all her help. Lets them walk all over her . . . Yes, and when I told this girl where to get off—she just up and quits.

"Oh, well, we're invited out tomorrow night . . . say, will you remind my wife when you call her to rush my tux to the cleaners? And to see if my tie's all right? And tell her to pay the man if he brings the grass seed. You know I just turn over all my money to my wife, and let her pay the bills—handle everything.

"You know she's got a lot of business sense for a woman that's never had to look after herself. Well, she took a course in typewriting in college but she never did anything with it. No, she just got married and let me do the worrying. Of course she does a little typing every now and then. She writes all my letters home to my folks, . . . and to lots of my old friends. And occasionally she runs off little business notes for me.

"Well, Miss Hack, I'm really glad you're going to get married and have a nice rest. Oh, is that your phone? . . . For me? . . . Who is it? . . . Mooch? . . . I don't know any Mooch . . . Oh, well, I'll talk.

"Hello . . . Yes . . . Who? . . . Mooch? . . . Oh, yes, of course! Old Bert Mooch! . . . Well, well, Bert, how are you? . . . No, I guess I haven't seen you since that Alpha Zany reunion . . . No, that was about ten years ago . . . What? . . . Well, I want to see you, too, Bert? What about coming out to dinner tonight? . . . Oh, she is? . . . Well bring her along, I'd like to meet your wife . . . What? . . . Oh, you have! How many? Two boys? . . . Well, bring 'em along, too. I've got three myself . . . Yes, say why don't you all come by the office and go out with me? . . . Oh, about 5:30 I guess. . . . Oh, no, no it won't be any trouble for my wife . . . No, no, she loves to entertain."

Business Men Use Jiu-Jitsu for Keeping Thin

Find It Reduces Waistline Rapidly And Effectively

By Ida Jean Kain

IT WOULD be difficult indeed to imagine the seemingly invincible Joe Louis of the prize ring at a disadvantage in a private scrap where the Queensberry rules didn't count. But we have it on the opinion of an expert that any boxer would be more than likely to wind up on the mat in a fight with a jiu jitsu master.

Our authority is Paul Zippel, himself a champion in this disconcerting art of putting strong opponents in their place. He says it's like this:

"The boxer is trained only in the use of his fists, whereas the jiu jitsu fighter uses his legs about as much as his arms—and the legs are 10 times as powerful as the arms."

Catches Victim Off Balance

In addition, the jiu jitsu expert has two or three other good tricks. He likes to let his opponent wear himself out. Then he catches his opponent when he is off balance—which he is most of the time. Finally, he knows how to fall so it won't hurt.

Every now and then boxers go up to the Zippel gymnasium and watch the jiu jitsu fighters slam each other around. When one strikes the mat it sounds like a cannon shot and the boxers avert their eyes, shuddering. If they struck the mat that hard, they wouldn't expect to get up!

So what has all this to do with you? Well, it's another means of keeping fit. One of the prize jiu jitsu pupils of the year, Mr. Zippel tells us, is a 70-year-old retired business man! Another business man who took it up has lost eight inches off his waist in just a few weeks.

Lessons in How to Fall

Exercises go along with the course. When members are not trying falls, holds or throws, they are working out with the punching bag, weights or the horizontal bars.

Elementary training includes lessons in falling. You squat on the floor, hands out at the sides, catching the shock on the hands and arms.

And when you want to break a two-fisted grip on your arm, take the free hand, place it under the other fist, and heave downwards. As our expert says, "Your two hands are always stronger than the other man's thumbs!"

Plant Flowers In a Glass Bowl

MOST FASCINATING of all indoor gardens—and easiest to care for—is a terrarium.

Behind its glass walls, flowering, foliage plants grow lustily. If you keep your terrarium covered, it seldom needs watering.

Gay and cheerful is a terrarium like the one we've pictured. All winter you can enjoy the bright red berries, the evergreen leaves of the sprigs of partridge-berry creeping cranberry, wintergreen.

A tiny Christmas tree grows quickly from a juniper berry and with the aid of moss, a winding path of pebbles, you can create a jolly little landscape.

Or, if you have a streak of curiosity, plant a mixture of tropical fern spores in a fish bowl. Or would you prefer to grow a flowering plant to perfection—a begonia, a trailing arbutus?

You can make a terrarium from any kind of glass bowl or container. Fill bottom with several inches of fiber or garden loam mixed with sharp sand. Moisten the soil well, then sow seeds or put in plants as you would in pot or garden. (If you use moss, poke holes in it for your planting). Put glass cover on at once.

As a companion piece for your glass garden, how about the lovely trailing wax plant? It has green or variegated foliage, tiny white and pink flowers.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 15.

HUGHES has been conquered again—by Mother Nature, of course. Hall and I started out with the best will in the world for New Haven, where our earnest young men of Columbia University were to lock horns with the giants of Mr. Yale's University. It was a perfect fall afternoon. —the trees were wearing their lovely new ensembles of red and brown, and the old gentleman and I tried to work ourselves into the old college spirit.

ALICE HUGHES

But it was not to be. The tempter intervened, in the person of my photographer pal, Marion Stephenson, who as Mrs. Graham Patmore has that lovely old farm 18 miles from Bridgeport, Conn. "Stop off with us," coaxed Marion, and before the spouse and I knew it, we had tossed away our Columbia pennants, turned our raccoon coats into laprobes, and were amateur hayseeds for a country week-end. And we didn't regret it.

"Why," asked old Hall "should we fight our way through a mob of overstimulated children to watch 22 young gangsters maul each other, when we can enjoy the glories of a perfect New England autumn day sitting quietly on our, er, chairs and drinking in the beauties of nature?" No answer was possible save, "Why, indeed?" So we stayed on at Patmanor, leaving Mr. Yale's bowl to its own devices. Anyhow, Columbia lost.

This is the month for the Northeastern country. As we sat in Marion's summer dining room nibbling at infant sausages, we could stare at the wooded hill behind the house. In summer a pleasant but monotonous green, now it was a living flame. The sun glinted on the pond hopefully scooped last August as a swimming pool. Marion was in the kitchen putting up grape preserves, with her Susie as chief of staff. The boys were making a flight of terraced steps out of hunks of field stone, which is Connecticut's greatest crop. I just sat, and reveled in the beauties of the reason and the day—I, who cannot bear to be more than a mile from Fifth avenue at its busiest. In this month of months, Nature is a powerful force, and makes even Ty Power and Clarkie Gable look like a couple of anemic midgets.

GIRL AMID NATURE—Marion the Hostess, who is a perfect fiend for auctions and things, and is internationally famous as the owner of 147 three-legged chairs, dragged me away from the breakfast table to rush off to a rummage sale held by the Volunteer Fire Company of Stepney, the village where Patmanor stands. Naturally, we were the first customers on hand, and the ladies in charge were all over us. Our purchases were a salad bowl (50 cents) and a midget baseball cap which I bought for my spouse (price, 5 cents). When we left, no other patrons had arrived, and we left the Stepney ladies lamenting at the firehouse.

THE PATMORES, unlike most of New York's amateur farmers, don't pretend to raise much of their own grub for the table. You'd die laughing at many of that ilk. When the sweet corn is brought to the table the hostess screams, "the corn is right from our own garden, picked this afternoon"—when everybody in the room knows that she couldn't tell a radish from a rutabaga . . . Driving up here along the Hudson River we saw the great liners of the belligerent powers, the Queen Mary and the Normandie, completely repainted in battleship gray, and very grim they look. Any night now they will sneak out into the Atlantic, no doubt to be used as transports to carry Canada's young soldiers to the sambles of the Old World. Our famed and beloved river has a deserted, unhappy look.

Montgomery Fire Groups Set Record

Silver Spring and Takoma Departments Score Perfect in Week's Campaign

Two volunteer fire departments in the metropolitan area of Montgomery County scored perfect records in fire prevention week which closed Saturday, it was announced yesterday. They were the Silver Spring and Takoma Park departments.

Although both companies were bothered with false alarms, the firemen said that the State-wide campaign must have helped check the average carelessness which causes fires. They were busy throughout the week, however, answering rescue calls.

The Silver Spring Volunteer Firemen's Association sponsored an essay contest on fire prevention for school children, the awards of which have not been announced. The Takoma firemen placed posters in stores and schools.

Rezoning Report To Be Made Today

A report on the hearing of the proposed rezoning of Columbia avenue, Takoma Park, Md., from residential "A" to residential "C" for apartment house building, will be made at the meeting of Mayor John R. Adams and the town council today at 8 p. m. in the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department hall, Carroll and Denwood avenues.

The petition on rezoning was filed by George H. Williams for lot 39, block 19. It is expected that the committee will request the petition be returned to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission without recommendation.

Episcopal High Marks Centennial

Dr. Kinsolving, Of Boston, Speaks At Celebration In Alexandria

High tribute to the accomplishments of the Episcopal High School, of Alexandria, Va., since its founding October 15, 1839, was paid by Dr. Arthur L. Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, Boston, Mass., in a sermon commemorating the 100th anniversary of the school yesterday.

Speaking before approximately 900 Episcopal pupils, alumni and friends, Dr. Kinsolving lauded the school, not only as an educational institution, but for the spiritual values which he said it had succeeded in instilling in its pupils and graduates.

450 Hear Address

The service, in new Centennial Hall, brought to a close a two-day centennial observance which was attended by some 450 former Episcopal pupils as well as the present student body. Among graduates who returned to participate were many who were attending classes before the turn of the century.

Dr. Kinsolving praised the school's founders for building an institution where boys and young men can come to find a place of spirit and tradition of the highest character."

Dr. Kinsolving made one reference to the world crisis when he expressed the confidence that present Episcopal students will meet any problems which may lie ahead and will carry out their assignments faithfully in a determined fight to uphold the ideals they have always known.

"With Spirit, Tradition."

"Whatever problems may develop from present world strife," he said, "will be met by these boys with a spirit and tradition which has characterized Episcopal High School students in the last 100 years. And I can feel for them, and understand their emotions, for I was a student in this school myself during that troubled period from 1913 to 1917."

Other former Episcopal pupils who participated in the centennial service were the Rev. A. M. Blackford, rector of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla., who read the first lesson, and the Rev. R. B. Nelson, rector of Christ Church, Winchester, Va., who read the second lesson. The Rev. Mr. Blackford is a son of the late Dr. Launceford M. Blackford, headmaster at Episcopal after the Civil War.

Dr. W. E. Rollins, dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, read the morning prayer, and the Very Rev. H. St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church, pronounced the creed and officiated at prayer service.

Rev. Lockett Gives Sermon In Arlington

'A World That Cannot Be Shaken' Is Topic At Community Church

The Rev. Walter M. Lockett, jr., pastor of the Community Methodist Church, preached yesterday on "A World That Cannot Be Shaken."

Henry F. Lyte, he said, wrote the Hymn, "Abide With Me" from which the following lines are taken:

"Change and decay in all around I see;

"O, Thou, who changest not, abide with me."

"The first line states the facts of life; change and decay are characteristic of earthly existence. The second line expresses the longing of the hymn soul for that which is steadfast and eternal in which it may place its trust.

"Let Us Have Grace"

"This same thought finds expression in the twelfth chapter of Hebrews. Yet once more will I make to tremble not the earth only, but also the heavens . . . This word signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken . . . Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God with reverence and awe.

"We are living in a time when it seems that not only the earth, but the heaven also, is shaken to its very foundation. The things on which we have counted either have been destroyed or are faced with possible destruction. Living in a world that is badly shaken, our only hope for inner stability and integrity lies in our ability to envision and live in that world of abiding values which cannot be shaken.

"In ancient Hebrew history, Uzziah was a great and effective king. Under his reign the nation enjoyed order, security, prosperity and peace. When he died, the bottom seemed to drop out of things. It was a terrific catastrophe for the people. In the midst of that calamity one ardent patriot, Isaiah by name, beheld the Eternal King. His prophetic ministry dates from that experience. 'In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up.' (Is. 6:1) When King Uzziah died and his world seemed shaken to its foundation, Isaiah caught a vision of the King who is everlasting and whose kingdom endures forever.

Rome Symbol of Power

"To the citizens of the ancient world Rome, Eternal City, was the symbol of all that was powerful, secure, steadfast, invincible. When the northern hosts began to batter at the gates of Rome, it was like knocking the props from under the things in which people had placed their faith. The world for multitudes was being badly shaken. But down in North Africa a Roman citizen in a monk's cell was writing about a new faith, a new vision. Rome might be captured and destroyed by the Vandals, but there remained 'The City of God,' a truly Eternal City, that could neither be shaken nor destroyed, in which people could put their trust.

"In this generation we have placed our faith in what we have called Western civilization. It has included such things as democracy, scientific progress, and humanitarian achievement. Now we see democracy threatened, and humanity blasted by scientific warfare. The world that we have known is being shaken to its core. But, even in a time like this, Christianity points the way to a world that cannot be shaken. Our civilization may pass away but God is eternal. We can still put our trust in Him and live triumphantly. For in Christ we have received 'a kingdom that cannot be shaken.'"

Cumberland Mayor's Chess Set a Memorial to War Dead

Rifle and Machine Gun Shells, Mounted On Buttons Taken From Enemy Dead, Made Into Pieces With Which to Play

By the Associated Press

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 15.—Mayor Harry Irvine's chessmen make a strange monument to the World War's unknown dead.

From pawns to kings, each piece was hammered and modeled carefully from rifle and machine gun shells picked up during the Argonne offensive; the base of each piece is a button, torn from the underwear of a dead enemy soldier.

The chess board is a square from the fuselage of an enemy plane, shot down over the Allied lines.

The story of the weird collection goes back some 21 years, when the A. E. F. was "mopping up" in the Argonne, and Dr. Julian Sibley, Mayor Irvine's brother-in-law, found time on his hands.

An Army dentist, a one-time machinist and a lover of chess and checkers, Dr. Sibley felt a chess set would help him forget times, places and circumstances. So he set to work, sometimes using his dental tools.

Long rifle shells produced kings, queens and pawns, each adorned with individualistic shapes. Shorter machine gun shells were raw material for knights, rooks and bishops. But they wouldn't stand up.

That's where the buttons came in. Unfortunately, Mayor Irvine suggests, they probably were easy to find.

Trio Raiding Chicken Houses Fired On by Joseph Royer

By the Associated Press

Mount Airy, Md., Oct. 15.—Sheriff Walter Shipley and his deputies were searching today for three men—one believed seriously wounded—who invaded Joseph Royer's chicken houses and engaged in a gun battle with Royer when he surprised them.

Royer reported to Sheriff Shipley he heard noises from the coops early in the morning and took along a shotgun when he investigated. He said he fired point-blank at a man he saw attempting to enter the henhouse, and the intruder fell.

Two other men emerged from the shadows, Royer asserted, and one opened fire on him with a rifle. The wounded man regained his feet and fled with the other two across a corn field.

Army of Word Architects To Pay Call on 'Mr. Smith'

Preview of Capra Picture Lures Writing Craft; Ann Rutherford Coming to Capitol Friday; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THE INTERNATIONAL press preview of Frank Capra's production for Columbia of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," to be celebrated in Constitution Hall tomorrow night under the auspices of the National Press Club, is beginning to take on something of the aspect of a national convention of American journalism.

BELL

Drama editors, columnists and special writers from New York, Boston and other Eastern cities will converge in large numbers upon Washington tomorrow. They will be in good company, what with rubbing elbows with members of the President's Cabinet, the diplomatic corps, Senate, House of Representatives, the members of the Press Club and all.

New York's wiggle picture desks, it seems, will be practically deserted for a day or two. Gotham's delegation to tomorrow evening's gala and velvet event will include Howard Barnes, of the Herald-Tribune; Frank Nugent, of the New York Times; Eileen Creelman, of the Sun; Bland Johaneson, of the Mirror; William Boehnel and Frank Farrell, of the World-Telegram; Leo Mishkin, of the Morning Telegraph; Rose Pelswick and G. E. Blackford, of the Journal-American; Kate Cameron, of the News; Archer Winston and Irene Thirer, of the Post, and Herbert Cohen, of the Brooklyn Eagle.

Nationally known New York columnists will be represented by Leonard Lyons, of the Post; George Ross, of the World-Telegram; Walter Winchell, of the Mirror; Danton Walker, of the News; Louis Sobol, of the Journal-American; John Chapman, of the News, and Dorothy Kilgallen, of the Journal-American.

Syndicate representatives will be Jack Stinnett, Dale Harrison, George Tucker and Mark Barron, Associated Press; Ira Wolfert, North American Newspaper Alliance; Joan Younger, United Press; George Lait, International News Service; Don Sutton, Newspaper Enterprise Association, and Ward Greene, King Features.

The motion picture trade press will be here to all intents and purposes en masse.

Since this soaring family journal leads the Washington field in the number of important news services that appear in its columns, readers of The Post will find among the visitors named—who are only a few of the total—many whose writings appear on its pages daily and Sunday (Advt.).

The itinerant ladies and gentlemen from out of town will not have much time to loaf while they are in our midsting. Visits to the Senate neutrality debate, cocktail parties, a deal of friendly hobnobbing and whatnot are on the convention's agenda.

It is Mary Harris, whose night-clubbing and show-going are familiar to Post readers, who suggests that the best laugh of the week is to be found in the newsreel at the Metropolitan. Graham MacNamee announces flamboyantly, if invisibly, that "La Belle France greets the British Tommies." And you see a withered old lady of 90 and a fat, middle-aged femme with most of her front teeth out, waving at the English troops. It is Mary's penetrating notion that if it's all like that, war must be a terrific disappointment to the Tommies!

It has been rumored for several days, but now it is a fact, definitely. I mean to say that when Carter Barron, Eastern division manager for Loew's, Inc., flew to Greenville, S. C., last week, it was bruited about that there was something behind the trip beyond the mere business of greeting Ann Rutherford as one of the queens of the annual National Cotton Festival. And so it turned out.

Mr. Barron's suspicion that Miss Rutherford is a remarkably talented and versatile young woman was eloquently confirmed by what he saw and heard. By burning up a few of the transcontinental wires running to the West Coast, he prevailed upon Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to permit Miss Rutherford to come on to Washington for a week of personal appearances at Loew's Capitol, beginning Friday. There probably was in the back of his mind a more or less—mostly more—vivid recollection of what Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland, contemporaries of Ann's on the M-G-M lot, had done when they were here for one day not so many weeks ago.

Anyhow, the ebullient Ann will be the star of the stage bill at the Capitol next week and probably will surprise you with the variety and brilliance of her talents. She was last seen on a local screen, it will be recalled, in "Dancing Co-ed," with Lana Turner, Richard Carlson and that sprightly cast of live-wire youngsters. Or, if you missed that one, you certainly haven't forgotten Mickey Rooney's perpetual sweetheart in the "Hardy" series.

If you have to know everything, Ann Rutherford is 5 feet 3 inches tall, weighs 110 pounds, has dark eyes and hair, a world of charm and is considered one of the most fascinating conversationalists of Hollywood's younger set. Further than that, she is described as a modest and unassuming young woman, whose success on the screen has not gone to her head. The Southland already has won her so completely—and vice versa—that she can't wait to get to Washington.

Today the Playwrights' Company increases to five the number of its productions either in operation or preparation for the 1939-40 season by placing the late Sidney Howard's new comedy, "Madam, Will You Walk?", in rehearsal with the incomparable George M. Cohan as star. "Madam, Will You Walk?" was completed by the author shortly before his tragic death on August 23 and supervision of the production during its preparatory stages has been undertaken by his close friend and associate, Robert E. Sherwood. The director will be Margaret Webster, and three imaginative settings will be designed by Robert Edmond Jones. Kurt Weill, who collaborated with Maxwell Anderson on "Knickerbocker Holiday," has composed incidental music for the play. Peggy Conklin has been assigned to the feminine lead and important roles also will be played by Sara Allgood and J. Arthur Kennedy.

Reverting to that "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" preview, everybody knows by now, of course, that Frank Capra, maker of the picture and three-time Academy Award winner, will be here in person for the gay goings-on. What perhaps is not so generally known is that there is better than an outside chance that Jean Arthur, costarred with Jimmy Stewart in the new fillum—just as she was in "You Can't Take It With You"—also will be here. While I rather more than suspect it, I don't guarantee it—as if that were any part of my job!

Replying-to-Yours-of-Yesterday Note

Probably Snapped on Connecticut Avenue!

JAMES STEWART AND ASTRID ALLWYN as they are limousined in Frank Capra's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," Columbia Pictures production, to be given an international press preview in Constitution Hall tomorrow night and seen later on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. Jean Arthur is costarred with Mr. Stewart and a stellar cast appears in support. "Mr. Smith" is hailed as Capra's best

The New Yorker

New York, Oct. 15.

BOOK DEPT.: When the late Thomas Wolfe was in London last, he dined with H. G. Wells and walked home . . . A phone call from Wells then roused him from his sleep. "I want you to come back to my house immediately," said Wells . . . "But it's so late," the author of "Look Homeward Angel" apologized, "and it's raining out" . . . "Nevertheless, come right over." Wells persisted—and so Wolfe dressed, got into a taxi and went to Wells' home. He rang the doorbell and was ushered into a room full of guests . . . "There, see?" said Wells, pointing to the 6-foot 7-inch writer. "Big bloke, isn't he?"

MOVIES DEPT.: Jim Thurber, who returned from Hollywood to produce his new play here, was describing his reactions to the film colony . . . "All the people in Hollywood," he said, "gave me the feeling that the boat would dock soon—and they'd never see each other again."

FINANCE DEPT.: Somerset Maugham has written to literary agents here offering to sell the manuscripts of all his books—the original manuscripts he has been saving ever since he first began to write . . . Maugham will sell them for $50.000 . . . The money would be placed into a trust fund for the benefit of new and deserving writers.

POLITICS DEPT.: When LaGuardia first was a candidate for public office 25 years ago his opponent for the Congressional job he sought was Mike Farley . . . The district in which they campaigned was predominantly Irish . . . LaGuardia beat Farley on a platform which stressed but one thought: "If Jimmy Walker were my opponent, I wouldn't be a candidate" . . . LaGuardia reminded Walker about this recently. "Well, Fiorello," said Walker, "you changed your mind in '29, didn't you?" . . . "Yes," said LaGuardia, "but then the stakes were bigger."

RADIO DEPT.: Dore Schary, whose "Boys Town" won the Academy Award last year, together with Allen Rivkin, Leonard Spigelgass and Harry Kurnitz, winner of the $1,000 Dodd-Mead Mystery Novel Prize, will broadcast on the "Adventures of Ellery Queen" program . . . "This program," they were assured, "has a Crosley rating of 11" . . . "What a coincidence," Kurnitz stated . . . "Why do you always broadcast on coincidence," Kurnitz stated . . . "Why, do you always broadcast on fessed, "but what a coincidence. That's the size shoe I wear."

MYSTERY DEPT.: Nunnally Johnson, who has been conferring here with John Steinbeck, was questioned about the whereabouts of the author of "The Grapes of Wrath" . . . "Is Steinbeck in town now?" a reporter asked Johnson . . . "He was here today, and he'll be gone tomorrow," Johnson informed. "Y'know—like Life."

LOCAL NEWS: The Bar Association soon will make an announcement about the sobriety of a high jurist . . . Jimmy Durante is arranging to play a legitimate role—in the revival of "Front Page" . . . Abbott and Costello will open at the Versailles . . . Lefty Gomez will recuperate in Cooperstown, the place where baseball was born . . . After waiting in Atlanta five days, Mrs. Gurrah Shapiro was allowed to speak to her husband for 15 minutes. She wasn't permitted to mention the Lepke case . . . Charles Laughton, who was scheduled to arrive here for the premiere of his new movie, "Jamaica Inn," will be delayed two weeks. He needs treatment for mastoids.

DRAMA DEPT.: Sam and Bella Spewack are writing a musical comedy with Ira Gershwin and Jerome Kern . . . A producer tried to interest A. C. Blumenthal in promoting the backing and Blumenthal wanted more information. "If we're writing it," said Spewack, "and Gershwin's doing the lyrics and Kern the music, that should be enough in itself" . . . Blumenthal was persistent, however, and Spewack finally was prevailed upon to se e him . . . "What's it about?" asked the promoter . . . "A boy," said the author slowly, "and a girl. They want something. Well, you know—they get it" . . . Blumenthal pondered a while. "Do you think," he asked, "that Jerome Kern can write that kind of music?"

Rich Variety Marks New Bill At Trans-Lux

European News Is Fully Covered; Travel, Fashions, Fun

The Trans-Lux Theater brings to its screen for the current week a world of diversified, thrilling and instructive news, fascinating travel scenes and good fun.

Tops again in the news are excellent, uncensored war pictures offering complete coverage from the five newsreel sources. The King and Queen of Great Britain inspect Scottish troops, "Somewhere In France," while Maj. Gen. Edward Windsor appears looking fit and ready in his field uniform. There are also shots of the British air force, field guns speeding to the Western Front by flat cars and trucks with actual firing by the heavy artillery. Premier Daladier visits French troops at the front and gives his answer to Hitler.

On our side of the Atlantic results of the added defense measures are shown along the Panama Canal and the arrival of the S. S. Iroquois in New York Harbor is recorded. Hoover sees the rebirth of the Polish nation as he speaks in New York City, climaxing Polish Week.

Interesting Travelogue

The travel section of the performance takes you to "Morocco" with the striking contrasts shown between the ancient cities of the Moors and the modern sections built since France took over this ancient North African country in 1912. Particularly interesting are the scenes of the city of "Fez," so seldom visited by the white man. Natives are shown shopping in the great market place or "Kasba," where they also enjoy native dancers, conjurors and snake charmers.

For the ladies, "Screen Snapshots" offers a subject for tea and bridge-party discussion—make-up—as it is done in Hollywood for both screen and street. The famous Westmore brothers, along with William Knight, are shown demonstrating their art.

The world of sport brings football throughout the land, Harold Vanderbilt winning the Long Island Yacht race, the Belmont Futurity, and an exciting motorcycle hill climb. Lew Lehr will make you laugh in "Jungle Love," while "The Whalers" brings one of Disney's best Donald Duck side-splitting cartoons.

You may also enjoy "The World of Tomorrow" from your comfortable seat. This offers pictures of the high spots at the New York World's Fair.

Gayety

"HEART BREAKERS." The Independent Burlesque Association presents the musical production in two acts and 22 scenes, starring Margie Hart, supported by Joyzelle, Lester Mack, Irving Karo, Bunny Mitchell, Ann Smith, Eileen Weitsel, Manny King, Harry Meyers and Scream and Johnson. Dance numbers devised by Jack Montgomery; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John.

Since the new season of burlesque is hardly under way, it may seem a bit premature to venture the opinion that this week's attraction at the Gayety Theater is the blue-ribbon revue on the circuit, but, until a better one appears, we'll say this production tops all previous bills seen here so far.

From lovely Margie Hart, star of the revue, to the prettiest and best dancing chorus seen here lately, "Heart Breakers" is a show that packs a real punch. The girls are dazzling and talented; the comedians offer new and novel wit and humor, and the lighting effects, settings and wardrobe hint of musical comedy magic.

Vivacious and fiery Margie Hart is a unique personality. Her manner of presenting a beauty parade is "different," defying imitation and exuding personality, plus. As is true of Ann Corio, there is only one Margie Hart.

Humorous Manny King and funny Harry Myers are featured in the comedy department, which is a vast improvement over the last several attractions seen here. Their hodge-podge of mirth also is different, both from the standpoint of presentation and originality. Lester Mack and Irving Karo, two competent character artists, lend valuable assistance to this portion of the bill. Karo's voice has never sounded better than it does this week.

The distaff side of the cast is upheld in no uncertain manner by the beauty parades of Ann Smith and Bunny Mitchell, while the acrobatic dancing of Joyzelle and the distinctive specialties offered by Eileen Weitzel and Eleanor Kane complete an array it would be difficult to match.

Rounding out an excellent two hours and a half of entertainment is the dance team of Screan and Johnson. These two sepia lads execute some rare routines.

Atlas

Harry Berry's "Sunkist anities" headlines the stage portion of the bill continuing through Tuesday, at the Atlas Theater. The unit consists of 17 people, including a seven-piece orchestra. Willie Dee, billed as the "nonchalant deceiver," leads in applause with his deft handling of two decks of cards and a cigarette trick in which he produces several packs of smokes from the air during his routine.

Bill King, jitterbug juggler; Phillips and Breen, super-class dancers, and Rosita and Perez, in an Indian adagio number, won the audience over for encores. The comedy end of the bill was handled by Dr. Lewis and his stooges, to the apparent delight of a packed house at yesterday's matinee.

The screen half of the program includes Bob Hope, in "Some Like it Hot," with Gene Krupa's Orchestra, featuring Rufe Davis and Harry Barris, of the "Three Rhythm Boys," and "Coast Guard," with Randolph Scott.

Another of those bargain bills that make you wonder how it's done.

Gale's Dilemma

Gale Snodergaard, whose principal fear is cats, has one for a pet and constant companion in "The Cat and the Canary," starring Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Oct. 15.—Come December 4, according to Mr. and Mrs. James Durbin and daddy Universal Pictures, Deanna Durbin will be sweet seventeen. According to a Canadian source, however, residing in Deanna's native-born Manitoba, her original birth certificate scrawls the year "1921" and not "1922" as the delivery date of the delightful Deanna. Which inaccuracy looms important for only one reason. If it's 1922, California law insists a girl under 18, wishing to marry, must obtain parental consent in writing. If it is 1921, however, the Universal favorite can marry aughan Paul, the assistant director, a minute after midnight December 4 with or without her parents' blessing . . . And it's refreshing to note that Deanna never felt it necessary to rumor her engagement to big or little-big shots, or to be seen here, there and everywhere with a lot of names. But the man she's given her heart to (and probably her first kiss) will be a "biggie" some day, climbing the same way Deanna has, through hard work and ability. Regardless of date of birth, Deanna and Vaughan have a date with the preacher and oodles of happiness to both of them.

HOPPER

One day last week two writers appearing side by side in the same local Los Angeles paper carried contradictory comments on the same personality. Itemed one: "Looks as if Helen Parrish is definitely concentrating on Forrest Tucker, who has come out here from Virginia with movie ambitions. They are dating each other every other night." Itemed the other: "Ann 'Scandals' Miller is ducking all b'wday sheiks 'cause her heart belongs to Forrest Tucker." Proving again, I suppose, that only God can make a tree, but a Forrest is something else. (P. Sssssst: We know his heart belongs to daddy.)

If you're unlucky enough to get a seat beside Joan Crawford at an opening or preview, you'll be luckier if you move. Because she buzzes like a bumblebee, muttering while looking at the picture "Ah, isn't she sweet? Oh, you mustn't do that. Oh, look out—the villain's behind you. Oh, dean, why did you do it that way?" I've heard about this act for years, but never caught it until the other night. Even though Joan has developed from our idea of a 5-and-10-cent girl to a glamorous screen star she is past 13, and should check that little girl impulse in her own boudoir!

Director Sidney Lanfield came across one of his coal black extras the other day, reading a book and mumbling to himself. His curiosity being aroused, he looked over his shoulder and discovered it to be a Jewish prayer book, and said: "What's the idea?" "Well, I belong to the Abyssinian race," was the eyebrow lifter, "And we're very devout Hebrews."

Dear, dear Edna Best nearly missed playing her most important film role, in "Swiss Family Robinson." She neglected to have her labor permit as a British subject renewed. She had to leave the United States and make a re-entry. She left immediately for Tia Juana, but forgot to make a hotel reservation, so slept the first night in her car But got back in time to report for work. And here, all the time, we have Mary Astor, who would have been wonderful in the part. But Mary's an American citizen!

What a cheer went up at the Sports Circle when Dudley Field Malone got a soap box and made a speech for peace, to save the youth of our land. As you know, Dudley was the collector of the port in New York during the last war, and his own son was born when Dudley was 48.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 15 (INS).—We can all stop guessing about Jean Arthur's movie engagements. She keeps a date at Columbia with Wesley Ruggles but of course it won't be "Arizona" which has been indefinitely postponed. This time it's Somerset Maugham's "Too Many Husbands," a gay comedy with Fred MacMurray and Melvyn Douglas, who reports when he finishes "Not Too Narrow, Not Too Deep," at M-G-M.

LOUELLA PARSONS

The Maugham story has an amusing Enoch Arden angle. Jean marries Fred who disappears and after a certain length of time elapses she marries Melvyn, the best man at their wedding. They are very happy until Fred reappears unexpectedly. Then the three take up life together and all goes well until the law steps in. Sounds naughty but it's just funny. Claude Binyon has prepared the script which Wes likes so well he postponed "The Rumplehearts of Remplar Avenue" in its favor.

When the great housecleaning arrived at M-G-M, Bob Benchley said adieu. I am glad to say, however, that he won't be lost to us for we need his type of laugh-makers. He will continue to make his popular shorts for Selznick International on a six-year basis, three to be made in New York and three here. Bob's new deal is really a reunion of old friends for David Selznick first brought him into the movies at RKO and later took him to M-G-M. Myron, who is Bob's business manager, is interested with Jock Whitney and David in Selznick International so it seems the most natural thing in the world for him to join up with the Selznick crowd.

Completely bowled over were the Warner Freres when they went bidding for "Philadelphia Story" and found that the producers of the Katharine Hepburn stage hit wanted in the neighborhood of $250,000 for the rights! Evidently the gentlemen haven't heard that Hollywood isn't paying this kind of money for plays or stories anywhere now that the economy bite is on all studio purse strings. However, I think it is very interesting that if they can get together on a compromise price—Warners will bring both Katy and Shirley Booth, who plays the girl reporter, to Hollywood for the movie version.

There were fireworks in our usually peaceful town after Skolsky printed that Victor McLaglen specified $15,000 of the $50,000 paid him by Universal was to be deposited in a bank in England to be used by that nation for purchasing war supplies. Such a move would be in direct violation of our neutrality and that's all Vic, who has been an American citizen since 1933, would need to get in bad with Uncle Sam. You may be sure the Government started an inquiry and all of Vic's representatives were busy explaining that it was just a pipe dream. By the way, someone told me that Vic and Eddie Lowe may do a Capt. Flagg-Sergt. Quirt radio stint and it ought to be good right now.

Chatter in Hollywood: Cary Grant has purchased Norma Talmadge's Santa Monica mansion, one of the most attractive houses in Southern California. When Cary got ready to buy a house he planked down a substantial sum in cash—not a note or a mortgage—which is unusual even in movietown. Whether this means he and Phyllis Brooks are getting ready to marry I don't know. Cary was sick in bed yesterday with a cold and was unable to talk. The rumor that he and Phyllis are already secretly wed still persists, although never has ever admitted it. But married now or later, Cary has a gorgeous home to which to take his bride.

A line or two: Olivia de Havilland, who is so beautiful in Technicolor, is again with Errol Flynn in "Virginia City." Ann Sheridan, Brenda Marshall and at least two other leading ladies were mentioned as Flynn's screen love—but it is Olivia who checks in tomorrow for the femme lead . . . Don't miss seeing "Drunk Driving," the best preachment against imbibing motorists you'll ever see. Jack Chertok produced it for M-G-M and it should be shown in every theater . . . Lillian Gish left quietly for New York to talk over the new play Guthrie McClintick is readying for her. But this doesn't mean that the deal for her to do "Triumph Over Pain" for Para is cold . . . Ingrid Bergman, now in Sweden, has taken out a policy with Lloyds to insure her safe return to this country. Her parents are the beneficiaries of what I hear is the biggest amount ever written to cover a single passage across the Atlantic.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Virginia Peine is being rushed in New York by both Anatole Litvak and Lin Howard. But all Hollywood believes that Litvak's heart really belongs to Ann Sheridan; Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Taylor hope to get started on their New York-Canadian jaunt today or tomorrow; Errol Flynn with Bud Ernst and Gwynne Pickford at the Cocoanut Grove; Reginald Gardiner and Tamara Geva a new duet; the cost of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is reported to be $2,7000,000 to date. Needless to say there won't be any more budgets like it while the war is on; the pretty girl with Lyle Talbot at Slapsie Maxie's was tagged Ardnoelle Massey; George Raft's auto accident on Friday the thirteenth has both him and Mack Grey on the superstitious side.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

DICK TODD UNDER WAY. REDSKIN BACK ROMPS 10 YARDS WITH PIRATE PASS JIMMY GERMAN LOOSE. AROUND END FOR 12 YARDS IN THIRD QUARTER

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Professional football, like this morning's horrible hangover, is apparently here to stay. The turn-out at Griffith Stadium yesterday was perhaps the most potent demonstration of Washington folks' fondness for the athletes who operate on a cash-and-carry basis.

POVICH

There have been larger pro football crowds in Griffith Stadium than the 25,982 who checked in at the gates yesterday, but 25,982 is, nevertheless, a large number of persons. And the fact that they chose to watch the Redskins meet the Pittsburgh Pirates is no less than striking. Who were the Pirates? Virtual nobodies in the pro league. In two seasons they have won only two games. They came to Griffith Stadium with only 14 points and four straight lickings to show for their first four games of this season, and save for Nebraska's Sam Francis there wasn't an outstanding former college star among the whole Pittsburgh shebang.

But apparently Washington people like pro football. They caught a sustained whiff of the possibilities last week when the Redskins ran up 41 points against the Brooklyn Dodgers. And as the 25,982 tumbled out of Griffith Stadium at the finish of the 44-14 annihilation of the Pirates yesterday they were still an excited gibbering lot marveling at the precision and the deftness of the post-graduate football players.

Pros Give Fans Better Exhibition

A score of that sort in a college game—a 44-14 count—might have made for a lacklustre, one-sided contest but as the pros played it yesterday it may have been one sided but it certainly was not lusterless. The Redskins despite their frequent scoring dashes were always facing a dangerous team, a club that had rebounded from a Washington touchdown in the first half minute and shoved over a pair of its own to take the lead.

Not so long ago we saw a big-time college game and after a diet of pro football it was excruciatingly drab. Truth to tell, we'd have walked out on it if we hadn't had duties in the press box. Quaking at the possibility of defeat, neither team would gamble and they stalemated each other all over the premises. We imagine that the only folks wo actually enjoyed the game were the students of line play, and if you meet a half dozen students of line play among the next 100,000 persons you meet, you will have stumbled upon a nest of the arrest individuals in the world.

Perhaps we've been spoiled by the frequent scoring in the pro games. The Redskins in their last two affairs have scored 83 points. That's more points than were scored throughout the 1938 season by any one of the following college teams: Nebraska, Catholic U., Colgate, Chicago, Georgia Tech, Indiana, Iowa, Marquette, Maryland, Stanford, Washington and Yale. We think people go to football games to see touchdowns.

The pros give no less than a grand show with their football. That 99-yard pass play executed by Frank Filchock and Andy Farkas in the third kuarter, while it may not have been typical, gives a person a pretty good idea to what lengths the pros will go to score a touchdown. The average college coach would have fainted had his quarterback faded behind his own goal line to throw a pass. Redskin Coach Ray Flaherty thoroughly approved the play and probably ordered it.

Use Different Tactics in Pro Game

It wasn't any outright play for the audience on the part of the Redskins. It wasn't merely a frill for the sake of the fans. The Redskins didn't have the game won by any means. They were leading only 19 to 14, and the third quarter was only two minutes old, and the Pirates were a touch club at that point. But the Redskins weren't content merely to nurse their lead in the manner of a college team. In pro football it is no high crime to pass frob behind the goal.

Back in the second quarter when the game was still anybody's, the Pirates had the ball on the Redskin 41-yard line, last down and a yard to go. What would a college quarterback do under the same circumstances? If he didn't punt he'd be yanked so quick he'd have reason to think the snap-signal had a hook attached. Well, the Pirates didn't punt. Sam Francis took that ball and rammed it through the middle for a first down and from that point th ePirates went on to score and reclaim the lead.

There were four games in the professional league yesterday. And the amazing gathering of 25,982 in Washington was the smallest of the four. At Sew York the Giants drew Giants and the lowly Eagles drew 34,471. At Chicago, the Bears and the Cardinals played to 29,592. Cleveland's ne'er-do-well Rams drew 30,096 at Detroit. Pro football seems to be doing very well for itself.

And so do the Redskins, particularly. Coach Ray Flaherty appears to have come up with a potent pair in Dick Todd and JiJmmy German. Todd, the Texas A. and M. lad, was touted as a dazzling runner, but so had others before him only to prove pro-league flops. But there is evidence that Todd is no morning glory. He runs too fast and too smartly. German, the unheralded boy from Centre is the true surprise of the Redskin squad. He does too many things too well to discount him.

It may be significant that the Redskins have won both of their last two games in the final half. They scored four touhhdowns against Pittsburgh yesterday. What they did was to wear the opposition out by the same relentless second half play against a tiring enemy. The Redskins came out of the Pacific Northwest a superbly conditioned Club this fall. They'll go back there for training next year ore else—or else somebody is plumb teched.

30,096 See Lions Defeat Rams, 15-7

Darrell Tully Scores Once and Passes to Moore For 2d Counter

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 15.—The Detroit Lions remained the only undefeated and untied eleven in the National Professional Football League by conquering the Cleveland Rams, 15 to 7, before a crowd of 30,096 at Briggs Stadium today. It was Detroit's fourth consecutive win and the fourth setback in five starts for the Rams who suffered today from a lack of capable substitutes.

The Lions more than matched Parker Hall, Cleveland's star passer with Darrell Tully, a product of Little East Texas Teachers College who roared over for the first Detriot touchdown in the second period and rifled a 10-yard aerial to end Bill Moore for the second in the final quarter.

Score Safety on Fumble

Detroit was first to score, counting a safety after Tully fumbled on the Cleveland 2 to end a 74-yard march following the kickoff. Cleveland went into punt formation but John Drake endeavored to plunge and was dropped behind the goal line.

Following the kickoff the Lions ripped up the field to the Cleveland 5 but the Rams held and took the ball on their own 20 after a fourth down Detroit pass struck the goal posts.

The Clevelanders swept the 80 yards for an early second period touchdown with Hall alternating at passing and running to place the ball in pay dirt. Drake made the score on a 1-yard plunge after taking a 23-yard aerial from Hall. Vic place-kicked the point.

83-Yard Touchdown Drive

Detroit went ahead to stay five minutes later as Tully climaxed an 83-yard touchdown drive with a dive from the 4-yard line. A 32-yard toss from Tully to Gordon Gore was the highlight of the assault. Paul Szakash's try for point was blocked.

Late in the third period both teams tried field goals, Spadaccini missing from the Lion 31 and Charley Hanneman, of Detroit, booting short on a 50-yard attempt.

Redskins Remain Tied With Giants for Lead

Local Backs Run and Pass Almost At Will After Seesaw First Half Battle; Pirates Get 19 First Downs

By Shirley Povich.

To the goggle-eyed delight of 25,982 Griffith Stadium customers the Redskins turned savage yesterday, unloosed a torrent of touchdowns and heaped a 44-14 defeat on the Pittsburgh Pirates.

It was a game to appease the touchdown-hungry spectator, even to bewilder him as the ferocity of the Redskins' attack sent ball-toting Washington backs across the goal seven times. It was swiftly moving, helter-skelter with the goal lines merely something to be crossed by a red-shirted athlete with a ball in his hands.

Bewildered, too, were the hapless Pirates who caught the full force of the Redskins' counterattack in the third quarter when three Washington touchdowns evolved before ten minutes of play in the period had expired. Only a few minutes earlier, Pittsburgh had held a 14-13 lead in what had loomed as a tight sort of ball game.

German Scores First

Before a half minute of the ball game was played, the Redskins had a touchdown, and Jimmy German had romped 14 yards across the goal. And ten minutes later, the Redskins were trailing, 7-6. Two minutes more, and the same Jimmy German was romping 84 yards with a Pittsburgh kick-off.

Seven minutes after the start of the second quarter the Pirates had reclaimed the lead with a 14-yard pass. And the next time the Redskins gained possession of the ball—presto! Touchdown.

And then in the third quarter the Redskins did indeed begin to roll. Ninety-six yards Andy Farkas galloped with a pass to the goal line. Four minutes later, it was Dick Todd crossing the goal on a 24-yard pass play from Filchock. Five minutes later it was Todd again, galloping 61 yards through tackle to a touchdown. And in the fourth quarter, with one minute to play, it was Ed Justice, scoring on a 32-yard romp around end.

Remain Tied for Lead

Thus did the Redskins maintain their tie with the New York Giants for the league lead, pouring it onto the helpless Pirates and amazing the 25,982 with the science and the finesse of their play. For the scoreboard boys it was a workout. The customers lost count. Even if thrills were a dime a dozen yesterday, it was a $1,000,000 football game.

Paradoxically the Pirates registered 19 first downs to the Redskins' 13. But there was a reason. The Reskins weren't trifling with first downs. They were dealing almost strictly in touchdowns and Washington fans rose jubilantly to acclaim two new heroes—180-pound Jimmy German, of Centre College,

By the Associated Press

Latrobe, Pa., Oct. 15.—The Bearcats of St. Vincent College and Xavier University eleven of Cincinnati played to a scoreless tie today before 6*,500 fans, the largest crowd ever to see a football game here.

The Xavaier defense was so effective in the first half that the Bearcats did not register a first down, but in the last half the home team threatened several times and did cross the Xavier goal line, but the play was called back.

Capt. Walt Strosser skirted the Xavier left end for 43 yards and a touchdown in the third period, but the officials rul edboth teams were offside.

The visiting team registered nine first downs to seven for the Bearcats.

Late Drive Earns Broncos 13-13 Tie

San Francisco, Oct. 15.—A touchdown ten seconds before the final gun this afternoon gave the Santa Clara Broncos a 13-to-13 tie with the University of San Francisco Dons, their traditional rivals.

It was a moral victory for the Dons, who have beaten the Broncos only once in 13 consecutive games.

Bears Swamp Cards, City Rivals, 44-7

Bruins Humiliate Redbirds Under Barrage of Passes And Ground Plays

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 15.—The Chicago Bears handed their home-town rivals, the Cardinals, a humiliating 44-to-7 defeat today before 29,592 spectators in the season's first meeting of the two teams.

The victory, earned easily on a powerful ground game and deceptive aerial attack, left the Bears still in the running for the western division laurels.

The Bears got their first touchdown on George Faust's fumble. The Card quarterback let the ball get away from him on his own 12 yard line and Joe Maniaci picked it up and ran across the goal line. Maniaci placekicked the point.

Score on Pass

The Cards subsequently found the Bears' line impregnable and punted, giving the Bears another opportunity to score. Starting on their own 39, the Bears drove straight down the field, Bernie Masterson's 10-yard pass to Les McDonald accounting for the 6 points. Maniaci again split the uprights for the point.

The Cards never threatened in the first period while the Bears built their lead to 17 points on Maniaci's field goal from the 21-yard line late in the period.

Both teams punched across single touchdowns in the second period. Milt trost blocked a fourth down Cardinal punt and the Bears took the ball on the Cards' seven. Bill Osmanski drove across for the score in two plays and Plasman place-kicked the point. Midway of the period Frank Patrick sparked a touchdown drive, running and passing the cards from their own 25. He hit left

Redskins' 99-Yard Pass Plya Is Record

Frank Filchock and Andy Farkas of the Redskin backfield were parties to a new all-time National Football League record yesterday.

When Filchock started a pass play from his own 1-yard line in the third quarter and Farkas took the ball on a 96-yard gallop to the goal, the 99 yards the play covered established the new record.

The previous record for ground covered on a pass play was 98 yards, set last year by Doug Russell and Gaynell Tinsley, of the Chicago Cardinals.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 15.—A lot of stuffy people have for a number of years been making football so complex with new and mystifying names for attack and defense that many confused customers are losing sight of the fact that the game's lone purpose is to advance a leather balloon down a manicured pasture by brute force.

CONSIDINE

Remembering this, today we take another step toward our goal of simplifying the game and unraveling the knotty reasoning of the gridiron theorists, by staring at Saturday's grid results with the beady eye of a clear thinker:

Notre Dame, 20; S. M. U., 19. Calling the signals in Esperanto, so that every player on the team would understand, the Polish-born Irish backs welded together a great combination in this game. The club had speed, power, and a determination not to let the ghost of George Gipp down. Ah, yes, and there were a couple of breaks. One of the Irish touchdowns came after an official had ruled interference with an N. D. pass receiver. S. M. U. had a chance to tie at the end but its Jack Sanders missed a kick. He hasn't been heard from since.

Army, Navy Fit to Be Tied

Army, 6; Columbia, 6. Navy, 0; Dartmouth, 0. A lot of alarmists, noting that the armed forces were held to ties, will immediately demand that Congress arm the CCC boys, build two ships for one, or pass a law giving Army and Navy football scouts first rights to all scholars now ripening in the coal mine and steel mill districts. But, one way you look at it, Army and Navy were fit to be tied. They had to be fit, for, after all, Columbia and Dartmouth have a lot more money than the Government has. And our next athletic dues won't come in until December 15.

Cornell, 20; Princeton, 7. Cornell scored touchdowns on its first two offensive plays. Tht feature of the game was the discovery in the press box of a reporter who didn't use "Blitzkrieg" in his story. He was promptly drummed out of the Football Writers' Association.

R. P. I., 26; Rochester U., 6. R. I. P., Rochester.

Central Missouri, 24; Tarkio, 6. There'll be some hari-kari committed when the news of that one gets back home.

Tulane, 7; Fordham, 0. Well, it's comforting to know that at least the Rams got halfway to the Rose Bowl this year—New Orleans.

GLMCZK Shift Proves Big Help

Ill. Normal, 0; Macomb, 0. Ill. Normal, ill normally, shows marked improvement this year with the introduction of the Glmczk shift, a modified 1½ wing, stressing weak side slants off short punt spinners, end-arounds and the kind of mousetraps which set men to beating new trails through the woods. However, in all justice, it must be pointed out that this was not the real Macomb.

West Virginia, 7; Cincinnati, 0. That makes five straight losses for the Reds.

Ouachita, 12; L. S. U. (N. E.), 6. Imagine that.

Harvard, 61; Chicago, 0. Dr. Hutchins wasn't kidding when he indorsed 10-cent football last year. However, when, Harvard is able to beat any club by that score the customers have every right to demand their dime back.

Georgetown, 13; Syracuse, 13. Ghecas, of Georgetown, ran 70 yards near the end to tie the score. That's going a long way to keep clean Georgetown's record of not having been beaten since 1937.

Giants Rout Eagles, 27-10 Before 34,471

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 15.—Brandishing the versatile offensive that won the national professional football championship last year, the New York Giants crushed the Philadelphia Eagles 27 to 10 here today.

After letting Philadelphia take a 10-point lead in the early portion of the game, the Giants suddenly lashed back with the force of a tornado to score one touchdown in the second period and 10 points in each of the last two chapters.

I twas their third victory and kept them in a tie with the Washington Redskins for the Eastern division lead.

34,471 See Contest

The Giants ground out their scores with the impersonal process of amachine as a crowd of 34,471 fans, bundling under coats and blankets in the cool recesses of the polo grounds, kept up a constant concert of cheering.

New York's first drive, late in the second quarter, started as soon as Philadelphia kicked off after its only touchdown of the season. Some sharp running and pasing by Eddie Miller and Dale Burnett brought two first downs and the ball to the Eagle's 38. Then Miller, a freshman in the pro ranks but a former star for New Mexico State, passed to Burnett for 34 yards. Smothered for three downs, Miller then drifted back and passed to Jiggs Kline in the end zone.

Ken Strong Kicks Goal

Ken Strong, veteran of ten years in pro ball, came in and placekicked the extra point. The one-time New York U. hero also booted oneother point after touchdown and a 19-yard field goal in the fourth period.

The Giants' second touchdown came on the third play of the sec-

Freak Goal Gives Radio Team Victory

Heurich's 1938 champions of the Washington and Suburban Soccer League got back into their winning stride yesterday, but it took a penalty kick in the last few minutes of the game to do it. The Brewers, played to a standstill throughout by Silver Spring eleven, cashed in on J. McBain's boot from penalty for a 1-0 victory.

Making its debut in the league, Sun Radio lost a heart-breaking 2-2 decision to Sandy Spring, when Dore, of Radio, brought the ball out of a scramble and accidently kicked the Springmen's winning point.

Today, as last Monday, The Post again regrets having to postpone one day its announcement of the winners of the previous week's football contest because of a record number entries.

The black for the coming week's contest will be published tomorrow.

Interference With Pass Receiver Costly for Pirates

Indian Spring Wins State Team Title Over Rodgers Forge

Nonresident Member and Ex-Muny Ace Help Rodgers Forge in Protested Move; Capital Title to Mrs. Walper; Mrs. Brant Wins

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Rodgers Forge imported a nonresident member from Richmond and a former Baltimore public links player in last minute fashion yesterday but their efforts were to no avail as Indian Spring won the Maryland State Golf Association team championship over the Rolling Road Course, 9½ to 8½.

Donald O'Brien, a former Georgetown U. linksman and now a resident of Richmond, and Eddie Johnson, Baltimore's outstanding public links player of the last two years, appeared in the Rodgers Forge lineup and despite the protests of Capt. Arthur Urban and Pro Al Jamison State golf officials allowed them to play.

Indian Spring, a heavy favorite to succeed Congressional as champions, won when the last match off the tee, Claude Rippy and Jerry Hart, turned in three points over Marshall Neel and F. Porter of the Baltimoreans.

Amateurs Best Scorers

Best scoring of the day when to the top amateur duo of the locals and one of the strongest teams in this sectikon, Roger Peacock, Mid-Atlantic champion and Ralph Bogart, D. C. champ who had a behst ball of 66 and won, 8 and 6, over John Hospelhorn and J. Irving McCourt.

Pro Al Jamison and Russ Hollebaugh of the winners divided three points with the pro-am duo of John Flattery and Dr. Ed Stinebert, while the other split match was Mel Shipley and Lou Harrison, Indian Spring, against Johnson and Stuart Windsor.

O'Brien, runner-up to Bobby Brownell in the recent Suburban Invitation, paired with F. Sweeney to score three points over Capt. Arthur Urban and Buddy Sharkey, while the Rodgers Forge team of Otto Greiner and Ben Burch lost only a half point to Volney Burnett and Bob Albertus.

The winners received individual silver cups and the State team trophy for their expected triumph.

CONGRESSIONAL

Billy Shea, a heavy favorite in the Congressional Club championship finals, watched a 30-inch putt on the eighteenth green dodge the cup and with it the club title went to Gene Pittman, 1 up.

One up playing the final hole, after winning the seventeenth with a par, Pittman had already three-putted and Shea stepped up to the short putt needing to drop it to send the match to extra holes. He missed and fell into he runner-up role for the second straight year. Pittman was runner-up two years ago.

She was out in 31 and 1 up, but birdies on the eleventh and thirteenth by Pittman led to an exchange in the advantage. Shea's par on the sixteenth squared the match, but his bogeys on the next two holes were costly.

MANOR

Dick Meyer captured the Manor Club title, holding to the remnants of an early lead to beat Alton Pratt, 2 up, in the 18-hole finals. Meyer succeeded Harry Pitt as titleholder.

The Georgetown freshmen turned two up on Pratt, a surprise finalist, and was three up leaving the twelfth. He lost 12 and 14 as his margin was cut to one, and then Pratt three-putted the Sixteenth, missing a chance to square the match.

Ivy Institutions Form Committee For De-Emphasis

Boston, Mass., Oct. 15.—Formation of a committee to tighten up regulations contained in the athletic agreement between Harvard, Yale and Princeton, and to attempt "to lessen undue emphasis upon athletics in general and football in particular," was announced jointly today by the three presidents, Drs. James B. Conant, Charles Seymour and Harold W. Dodds.

Named to the committee were Prof. A. Chester Hanford, dean of Harvard College; Prof. Clarence W. Mendell, former dean of Yale Colleg, and Prof. Christian Gauss, dean of the college at Princeton.

It was stated that the agreement, originally drawn in 1916, has been again revised without in any way changing the basic features of the understanding, but with the addition of certain clauses including the provision that the inter-university committee shall have final authority to decide all questions of eligibility.

Washington Post Trophy Play At Chevy Chase Club Today

The weather man's prediction of fair weather today gives the seventh annual Washing Post Trophy tournament at least an even chance to beat the rain jinx as the event is carded over the Chevy Chase course.

A two-day downpour forced a cancellation of the event October 2, and last year, when it was held over the match play route, the title round was postponed three times in a rainy spell.

The low net scored at the end of today's 1-hole rounds will receive the Post trophy for one year, and a silver bowl for permanent possession. The low gross scorer will also receive a silver award. Other prizes will be awarded by the District Women's Golf Association.

The field of 193, that ties the largest entry in the history of the Association, will be reduced somewhat by the postponement, but a great majority will leave the tee in the last even of the season open to all Association players.

The Post Cup tourney was played over the match-play route for the first six years, but the growth in the Women's Tournament schedule found the evetn taking up too much time on the fall card and was reduced to a day.

Next year it will be played over two different courses, with the players divided according to handicaps.

Mrs. Arnold McNitt, Congressional, and Marion Brown, Manor, are the only former champions in the field.

The evetn is the first of three on the week's card for the women golfers. Wedensday Mrs. J. F. Dowdall's Intercity team will visit Philadelphia, and Friday the President's Plate play is scheduled at Columbia.

Columbus Beats Louisivlle, 28-0

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 15 (AP).—The Columbus Bullies took to the air today and passed the Louisville tanks ragged in winning a 28-to-0 American Professional Football League victory.

Bob Davis, former University of Kentucky star, led the aerial offensive by completing eight of ten tosses for a total gain of 198 yards. Three of his passes produced touchdowns and he made the fourth himself on a 25-yard cutback through right guard.

Postgrad

By Jack Munhall

The football season is now well under way (scoop!) and the time is ripe for the first postgrad prediction column which should be read avidly by all local college coaches and players who have nothing better to do. The Postgrad public probably won't. He remembers last year. [That's no lie.—Editor's note.]

MUNHALL

Wasting no time, Postgrad will cast a fearful jinx upon Catholic University's budding eleven by forecasting the Cardinals' first undefeated season in modern history. If that wasn't enough burden to place upon the Brookland Brulsers, they also get a nomination as the District's most surprising team.

Nor will C. U. Head Coach Dutch Bergman escape the finger. The Postgrad Palm of Praise is extended him for the outstanding coaching job to date, and also for being the best local college coach announcing local professional football games. Second prize in the coaching contest goes to George Menke, of American University, for his feat of placing 11 able-bodied gridders on the field Saturday against Randolph-Macon and yet have enough players left to balance the bench.

Come and Get Your Reward, You Honored Fellows

Skipping here and there to award various other District distinctions, the recipients of which are entitled to a round trip, all expenses paid, to the Baltimore Beer Bowl postseason game, if they read this before the column is yanked out of the next edition by the sportswriter who was rewriting the Pelixville Morning Prevaricator when we sneaked this piece to the composing room. Hurry to The Post, fellas, we're off.

[The following is purely fictional and should the name of any player given fit that of any dead or living football player seen in action or interviewed by the writer, it is merely coincidental.—Editor's note.]

Best Running Back—Lou Ghecas, G. U.
Best Passing Back—Jules Koshlap, G. U., with just a shade over Maryland's sensational sophomore, Merle DuVall.
Best Plunging Back—Rocco Pirro, C. U.
Best Blocking Back—Murphy Booth, G. W.
Best Kicking Back—Pete Sachon, C. U.
Best Kicking Lineman—Mike Kopcik, G. U.
Best-Looking Sophomores—Kopcik and DuVall.
Best All-Around End—Bob Nowasky, G. W.
Best All-Around Tackle—Carmen Pirro, C. U.; or Ralph Albarano, Maryland.
Best All-Around Guard—Augie Lio, G. U.
Best All-Around Center—Bob Smith, Maryland.
Best Team in Town—G. U. or C. U., be you Card or Hoya.

(The above list is subjected to drastic change without notice, should we have overlooked any big guys who would recognize us despite the Dr. Jekyl likeness of above picture.)

Debate on Merits of C. U., G. U. Elevens Foreseen

Even at this early date Postgrad predicts a fearful clash of public opinion in about two months between supporters of Catholic University and Georgetown as to which is the unofficial District college football champion. Barring big upset, C. U. should clean up the rest of its schedule—West Virginia Wesleyan, Tulsa, Miami, St. Anslem and Long Island—and Georgetown should at least go into its final game against N. Y. U. with an unbeaten slate.

In the event C. U. does win its remaining games, which undoubtedly are a lot tougher than they sound if said quickly, and Georgetown drops the duke to N. Y. U.'s very powerful Violets there would be no quietus on the arguments of Hilltop supporters. They will say, and justifiably, that G. U. played stronger opposition, a "suicide schedule" for a squad not three deep at any position. Temple, Syracuse, Maryland, George Washington, Bucknell and West Virginia would be a considerable assignment for most of the Nation's top-flight elevens.

Agilely aloof from this argument, Postgrad, nevertheless, would under no circumstances concede any other District team an edge over Georgetown if a 13-13 tie with Syracuse constituted the Hoyas' only blot. This with full realization of the strength of South Carolina and Detroit, C. U.'s first two victims.

Grid Grit—Statistics say Catholic University is the strongest of the local crop, offensively and defensively . . . the Cards in three games, two of them major ones, have scored 60 points and yielded only 13 . . .

Mush Dubofsky, Georgetown line coach, who protested statements that the Syracuse line outplayed his own in the second and third quarters Saturday, might read other accounts of the game and be enlightened . . . he might peruse the New York Times, a fair sort of a rag.

North Carolina's Test at Tulane Tops Card; Clemson Plays South Carolina In the Week's Only Conference Tilt

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 15.—Southern Conference football teams will devote this week-end to intersectional strife with undefeated North Carolina's test at Tulane heading a card of nine scraps against schools of other regions.

Clemson's Tigers will seek their second loop victory against South Carolina in the annual State Fair meeting at Columbia on Thursday for the only tilt of the week between circuit members. Clemson has defeated North Carolina State while the Gamecocks lost to Wake Forest and defeated Davidson 7-0 yesterday.

Only Undefeated Team

Mid-October finds North Carolina as the only remaining undefeated-untied club in the 15-member conference. Richmond's Sppiders were deadlocked 6-6 at Rutgers after rolling up a string of three victories.

Tulane whipped Fordham Saturday while North Carolina was forced to come from behind in the final period to beat New York U., 14-7. The hopes of both clubs for national recognition depend on the outcome of the game at New Orleans. Tulane won at Chapel Hill last year by 17-14.

Duke's Blue Devils, beaten for the first time since 1937 at Pittsburgh, will conclude this season's series of three intersectional games against Syracuse at Durham.

A war between the States flavor will be injected into the gridiron battling when Gettysburg comes to Richmond as a threat to the Spiders' clean slate.

Maryland vs. Rutgers

North Carolina State's Wolfpack, which took a 32-0 trouncing from Wake Forest last night, will go to Detroit, while Maryland's Old Liners, beaten for the first time this season by Virginia, will travel to Rutgers.

Wake Forest's Deacons, who have been steaming along at top speed since the early licking by North Carolina, entertain Western Maryland in a night game. The Citadel goes to George Washington on Friday.

The strong Centre team comes to Virginia Tech, William and Mary plays host to Hampden-Sydney and Washington and Lee makes its annual journey to Charleston to meet West Virginia's Mountaineers. V. M. I. meet sthe powerful Virginia club in a test which may determine the Old Dominion State championship.

The conference standings show North Carolina still in front with three wins and seven other teams without a defeat by a loop member as yet.

Virginia U. Defends Title Defends V.M.I.

Old Dominion's Biggest Gridiron Event This Week

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 15.—The University of Virginia's Cavaliers will begin defense of their State football crown against V. M. I.'s heavily armed Flying Squadron at Lexington in the Old Dominion's biggest gridiron evetn for this weekend.

Last year's contest between these two rivals, who have been meeting since 1893, ended in a 12-to-12 deadlock and attracted Scott Stadium's largest crowd of 12,000.

Virginia Favored

In 1938, V. M. I. was favored, but the Cavaliers took advantage of the breaks and played inspired ball to gain a tie. This year Virginia has the advantage in reserves and experience, but anything can happen when such brilliant backs as Capt. Paul Shu, Bosh Pritchard and Nelson aCatlett open up in the Keydet backfield.

The game will highlight V. M. I.'s home-coming celebration. The Cadet Corps and Band will march in review on Alumni Field before the scrap.

Another important game for Saturday will find Richmond's unbeaten Spiders matched against a strong Gettysburg squad which whipped Drexel 60 to 70 yesterday. Richmond has beaten the Apprentice School, Washington and Lee and Randolph-Macon. Yesterday the Spiders tied Rutgers, 6 to 6. They have amassed 78 points, while the aerial touchdown at Rutgers was the first scored against them this season.

Center vs. Virginia Tech

Center College will bring the praying Colonels' strongest squad in receitn years to Blacksburg for a game with Virginia Tech, and William and Mary's Indians, who made an mpressive defensive showing in holding Tech to a 6-to-6 stalemate, entertain Hampden-Sydney at Williamsburg.

Washington and Lee renews its old rivalry with West Virginia, meeting the Mountaineers at Charleston. Randolph-Macon meets Roanoke at Salem and Catawba goes to Emory atnd Henry for a night tilt.

The record of State teams for the season:

	W.	L.	T.	P.	OP.
Richmond	3	0	1	76	6
Emory and Henry	4	1	0	42	39

Hoya-Colonial Game to Draw Record Crowd

Probably the largest advance sale in the history of both schools is being reported by the athletic departments of George Washington and Georgetown universities as both teams point for their long-awaited football game at Griffith Stadium October 28.

Resuming football relations after a lapse that dates back to 1922, these old and traditional rivals are expected to attract better than 25,000 paying customers when they line up for the kick-off.

In an effort to accommodate their patrons both schools have arranged for a downtown sale that will be inaugurated tomorrow at 9 o'clock. Tickets will be handled by Sport Center, the American Automobile Association and at Griffith Stadium and have been on sale at the athletic departments of Georgetown and George Washington since September.

"I can say that we have never had an advance sale to approach the one for this game," Gabriel Murphy, graduate manager of athletics at Georgetown, stated. "We have had requests for tickets from all over the East, as well as locally, and the choicer the tickets the more certain has been the sale."

From George Washington University Max Farrington, director of athletics, likewise reports a brisk sale.

Norwich Back Leads Eastern Point Makers

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 15.—Ann all-around performer from a small New England college, Walter Domina, of Norwich, heads the point-getters on Eastern college gridirons after the second week of October football.

Given an early start, the Norwich cadet has played in four games and scored in each one for a total of 40 points, 10 more than a half dozen rivals who were tied for second place. Domina has made five touchdowns, the high mark in that department, converted four points after touchdowns and is the only Eastern player to make two field goals.

Tied for second are Jack Morlock and Everett Elkins, of Marshall (W. Va.) College; Stine, of West Liberty, W. Va.; Shako, of Rensselaer; Mammerstein, of Union, and Shoemaker, of Gettysburg. They have five touchdowns apiece for 30 points.

Matman Protests Referee Bortnick For Arena Bout

Protesting Benny Bortnick's action in disqualifying him last week, Don Evans, new wrestling sensation from Houston, Tex., has demanded that a new referee be used for his reutrn co-feature match with Jack Hader on Thursday night's card a tTurner's Arena. The Golden Terror meets "Bad Boy" Brown in the other part of the double windup.

Evans filed his protest with Promoter Joe Turner yesterday, and asked that either Casey Berger or Cy Burns be used as referee. Turner has the protest under consideration and will make no decision until tomorrow, he said.

Evans caused a near ringside riot last Thursday when he stormed about the ring and assailed Referee Bortnick for disqualifying him after eight minutes. The crowd, all for Evans, booed vociferously for 10 minutes.

17 Teams Set Pace in U. S. After Weekend of Ties, Upsets

Pitt 'Surprise' Team of Season

Notre Dame Eleven Wins Third Game By Total Margin of Seven Points; Cornell Shows Power in Ivy League

By Bill Boni
Associated Press Sports Writer.

Seventeen college football teams, picking their way through a smoke screen laid down by eight major-game ties and a score of other battles in which the winning margin varied between one point and seven, today had established themselves more firmly as the leading exponents of punt, power and pass in their territories.

In the rough geographical divisions of the gridiron map, they can be spotted as follows:

IN THE EAST—Pitt, winner of its third straight, this time by 14-13 over Duke; Cornell, its advance billing as Ivy League powerhouse given firm support byits 20-7 defeat of Princeton; Carnegie Tech, 21-0 winner over Case and unscored on in three appearances.

MID-WEST—Michigan, 27-7 conqueror of Iowa, and Ohio State, victor over Northwestern by 13-0, in the Big Ten; Oklahoma, rated well able to defend its Big Six crown after a 24-12 defeat of Texas; Notre Dame, which downed Southern Methodist 20-19 and has won three games by a total margin of seven points.

SOUTH—Tulane, which showed ample power in subduing Fordham, 7-0, and Tennessee and Alabama, which had warm-ups for their meeting next Saturday, in the Southeastern Conference; Duke and North Carolina, which came from behind to top New York U., 14-7, in the Southern. The Tarheels next meet Tulane.

SOUTHWEST—Texas Aggies, which romped to a 33-0 first half lead over Villanova and then coasted to a 33-7 win, and Baylor, "drak horse" contender with its smartly-gained 19-7 defeat of Arkansas.

FAR WEST—Southern California, which met little opposition in downi nglllinois, 26-0, and Oregon, 6-0 victor over California for a conference record of two victories and one tie.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN BIG SEVEN—Utah, which again proved the class of the conference by routing Brigham Young, 35-13.

Pitt's triumph over a favored Duke eleven was another step in the Panthers' amazing progress. Under a new coach, and with new me nin ten first-team positions, they have come up with a faster, more varied attack than Jock Sutherland gave them. Two passes, both to Dick Cassiano, and two extra-point kicks by Ben Kish beat the Blue Devils.

As against Syracuse, Cornell unleashed its power in spurts. Its three scoring plays against Princeton covered 157 yards, and in the second half the Big Red was content to lay back and ruin the Tiger pass attack.

Individual Star

Michigan's Tom Harmon turned in the day's best "one-man gang" showing. The Gary (Ind.) halfback scored all of his team's points against Iowa. His passes set up two short-gaining touchdown plays, he ran 29 yards to pave the way for another, made good for 90 yards with an intercepted pass the last time, and kicked three extra points.

Ohio State's Don Scott and Jim Strausbaugh paced the last-period attack that downed Northwestern, whose Bill de Correvont had a deficit of 4 yards on 11 trips with the ball. Except for 68 and 71-yard runs by Texas Sophomore Jack Crain, Oklahoma held the upperhand throughout, and Notre Dame, which won its first two games on kicks, won the third on a missed kick—an S.M.U. extrapoint try by Jack Sanders that failed after the Mustangs had blocked a Notre Dave put on the Irish 2 and scored.

Tulane power, as expected, was too much for Fordham, while George Stirnweiss of North Carolina again proved to be the difference between North Carolina and N. Y. U. last year.

Strongest Team in Years

Texas A. and M., emerging from the scrambled Southwest picture with its strongest team in years, scored and paved the way for scores by all possible means against Villanova, while Baylor's Junior Jimmy Witt and Sophomore Jack Wilson were standouts in the neatly-rounded attack that humbled Arkansas.

Amby Schindler looked the best of a long line of high-geared Southern California backs who romped through Illinois almost at will, and Oregon had the power for one 76-yard March, all on running plays, that brought down California for the third time this season.

Of the day's eight deadlocks, the only surprising one was the 14-to-14 tie to which Stanford battled favored U. C. L. A. Columbia and Army, both below their par of recent years, struggled to a 6-to-6 score, with the Lions again proving Lou Little a fine one-game pointer by holding the upper hand until an 81-yard passing play scored for the Cadets in the closing minutes.

Win Streak Hits Snag

Georegtown's ten-game winning streak came to 13-to-13 grief against Syracuse; Navy and Dartmouth, slow to get started in their openers, plodded to a dull scoreless tie; Mike yelene's 45-yard sprint and Fred Montague's extra-point kick brought Purdue up to 13 to 13 with Minnesota in a game that had shaped up as an even-Stephen proposition, and Rutgers and Richmond. William and Mary and Virginia Tech, and Washington and Lee and Southwestern also had to split the day's honors.

Except for one 51-yard scoring pass, Penn appeared to be holding something back in its 6-to-0 defeat of Yale, while in other close-fought Eastern games Temple, beaten in the last 15 seconds by Georgetown and by Carnegie Tech when time ran out, put on a rousing third-period drive to down Texas Christian, 13 to 11; Allan Donelli, the coach's kid brother, scored the Duquesne tochdown that edged out Manhattan, 7 to 0; Joe Carrig blocked two kicks, Rocco Pirro scored two touchdowns and Carmen Pirro kicked two extra points to give Catholic U. a 14-to-13 decision over eDtroit, and Western Reserve recovered Boston U. fumbles to win, 19 to 14.

Wins on "Fluke"

In the Midwest, interference on a fair catch gave Marequette a free-kick field goal to upset Michigan State, 17-14; Nebraska had an unexpectedly tough time winning its Big Six debut, 0-7, from Iowa State; Kansas beat Colorado State, 7-0, off a pass interception; West Virginia defeated Cincinnati, 7-0, and Oklahoma A. and M., pushed around in earlier games, surprised Tulsa by 9-7. On the West Coast, sub Bill Sewell's coffin corner punt broke the ground for Washington State's 6-0 upset of Washington.

In the South, Louisiana State, Virginia, Virginia Military and Furman had narrow escapes. Leo Bird, L. S. U.'s surprise star of the Holy Cross game, recovered a fumble by Ernie Lain and then tossed the passes, the last one to Ken Kavanaugh, that beat Rice, 7-0; Virginia topped Maryland, 12-7, with all the scoring on aerials; Sub Back Abisha Pritchard put on a one-man show as V. M. I. turned back puzzling Vanderbilt, 20-13, and Furman beat the Citadel, 7-0, in a Southern Conference duel. Auburn tossed in a surprise by outplaying Mississippi State to win by 7-0

Outside of the one-sided victories of Alabama, Tennessee, Georgi aTech and Kentucky over outclassed minor rivals (they totaled 142 points to none for their opponents), few games were settled by decisive scores.

Smashing Triumph

Most notable of the few were Harvard's smashing 61-0 rout of Chicago, Mississippi's 34-0 trampling of Centenary, Wake Forest's 32-0 defeat of N. C. State, the biggest score in the 3 1years of their rivalry, and Penn State's 49-7 blasting of Lehigh.

Indiana recovered a fumble and cut loose with a long-gainer to shut out Wisconsin, 14-0; Holy Cross bounced back from its L. S. U. defeat as Ronnie Cahill paced the attack that beat a sluggish Georgia team, 13-0; Indian Bill Geyer, a sophomore, was the star in Colgate's surprise 10-0 win over Brown, and Kansas State, though an injury benched Elmer Hackney in the early minutes, throttled Colorado so badly in winning by 20-0 that the Buffaloes' attack showed a net loss of 13 yards.

Pat Comiskey Meets Hill at Arena Tonight

Young Irish Heavy Seeks 16th Knockout On First Indoor Card

Pat Comiskey, 19-year-old Irish hope for the heavyweight championship of the world, will attempt to add another scalp to his collection of 15 knockouts in 17 professional fights tonight at Turner's arena when he meets "Silent" Joe Hill, 202 pound Californian, in the eight-round feature match.

Both fighters are appearing in Washington for the first time, headlining Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn's inaugural indoor show of the season which opens at 8:30 p. m.

Comiskey, who has attracted much attention as a preliminary fighter on recent "big money" fights in the East, has the distinction of being the only fighter in the present crop of heavyweights that seasoned boxing observers believe capable of ultimately taking Joe Louis' crown.

Climate Made Difference

Although he will be a top-heavy favorite over the mute Californian, Walter (Good Time Charley) Friedman, manager of Hill, breezed into town breathing predictions that Hill will knock out Comiskey.

"My boy wasn't used to the climate yet when he fought up there in Philadelphia," Good Time Charley explained yesterday, referring to Hill's loss by a decision to Abe Feldman in a six-round preliminary on the recent Tony Galento-Lou Nova fight.

"Joe was seven pounds underweight—why he had just been in this part of the country three days and the change in climate sort of got him. He just couldn't get himself going," Friedman insisted, adding in a whisper, "Comiskey is going to get knocked out."

Last Fight Short

The Paterson, N. J., Irishman, in his last fight, knocked out Jarl Johnson in 1 minute, 15 seconds of the first round on the Galento-Nova card.

Topping the preliminary card tonight will be Al Hart, 220-pound Washington Barracks colored fighter, and Jack Rose, of New York, in a six-rounder.

Phil Furr, now out for a comeback, meets Joey Spangler, of Richmond, in another six. Buster Miller, of Washington, meets Bill Twomey, of Richmond, in a four, and Al Gilbert, local middleweight, fights another four with Gunnar Eng, Swedish importation.

St. Martin's Loses

The '25' Club juniors, 125-pound gridmen, trounced St. Martin's by an 18-0 margin yesterday at Edgewood Playground. Teams wanting games with the winners should call Decatur 5967.

Western State Coeds Claim Powder Bowl Football Title

Upperstate Eleven Beats Lower Class Foes; Girls Scorn Cleats, Trousers but Love Action

By the Associated Press

Gunnison, Colo., Oct. 15.—Western State College coeds, after their first fling at football, were eager for more. That is, some of them were. Others, nursing bruised muscles, were all for giving the sport back to mere man.

"I hope we can play a regulation game every year. I wouldn't be afraid to challenge the whole world," enthused Alice Shanks, of Fowler, Colo., captain and quarterback of the upperclass eleven which wona a 13-to-6 victory yes-

Loves to Bowe 'em Over

"I love this football," chorused one of her teammates, Helen Ruth Wilcoxson, of Hotchkiss, Colo., a 115-pound tackle. "I love to bowl 'em over."

Opal Pyles, of Fowler, a tackle for the losers, was skeptical. "I'm not so sure about this football. It's too rough," she said.

"Some of the girls were awfully rough," conceded Billie Lou Lindsey, of Canon City, Colo., another tackle for the winners. "I like the game though."

Reflectively, she added, "t might have been better if we had worn knee guards."

Scorn Trousers, Cleats

The girls scorned the padded trousers and cleated shoes worn as standard equipment by men and played bedecked in trim shorts and tennis shoes.

They wore, however, regulation helmets, shoulder pads and jerseys.

The tilt was christened the "Powder Bowl" but take it from the referee, Elbert Barrett, freshman coach at the college, nobody pulled any punches.

The only variation from men's rules was shortening of the quarters to six minutes.

The girls, thanks to assistance volunteered by the varsity gridders, turned up with a variety of forward and lateral passes, end runs, line smashes, reverses and spinners and kicks.

They blocked and tackled, too, as though they meant it.

"I had to dole out plenty of lineament to help repair the damage," said Barrett, grinning.

Two More Midget Auto Races Here

With most of the other outdoor midget auto tracks in the East already closed for the winter, Promoter Ray Alvis will stage two more shows at Capitol Speedways, the first being listed for tomorrow night at 8:30 p. m.

Twin features of 25 laps each will mark the second-to-last showing, over a Speedway course that has been greatly improved.

tackle for 12 yards and the touchdown, and then placekicked the point.

Scoreless Third Period

Neither team scored in the third period, the Cards repulsing an advance by holding firm after the Bears had registered a first down on their 2-yard line.

But the Bears began rolling again in the final period. Masterson passed the Bears deep into the Card territory, then tossed a short pass to Ray Nolting for the touchdown. Joe Stydahar placekicked the point. Nolting scored again less than a minute later, intercepting a pass and running 35 yards for the score. A pass from Masterson to Plasman failed to connect the point.

Rule Book 'Best Seller' After Marquette Wins on 'Freak'

By the Associated Press

East Lansing, Mich., Oct. 15.—Football's rule book, the little paper-bound volume which college players are told to memorize but fandom seldom opens, was challenging the "best sellers" here today as a potentially popular tome.

For, amid much head-scratching and wrinkling brows, the layman sports follower was trying to get the formal lowdown on that free kick with which Marquette's golden avalanche snatched out a last period 17-to-14 verdict over Michigan State Saturday.

'Twas a heated scrap, with the lead seesawing from one team to the other, when suddenly in the final period Referee William Blake called a halt to procdings and pnalized Michigan State 15 yards to its own 15-yard lin after it had punted.

Another shock—and worse to the 12,000 State fans: Marquette was allowed a free kick. Here, with the score tied, 14-14, Bob Kemnitz, Hilltopper guard, coolly planted a place-kick between the goal posts for the ultimate winning points.

Referee Blake, upheld in his ruling by coaches, explained that on the punt Bill Batchelor, State center, had interfered with the safety man's "opportunity to make a fair catch." Blake ruled that Batchelor had thrown up his arms "as if to catch the ball," and that constituted "interference with the opportunity."

The fact that the safety man, Harry Leysenaar, had failed to signal for the fair catch made no difference, Blake said. The penalty—look in the book—says 15 yards, with a "free kick" of any sort then available to the offensive team; or it may choose to scrimmage, just as it wishes.

Legal, but novel under Saturday's circumstances.

"I've seen it enforced before," End Coach Tom King, of Michigan State, wryly said, "but never where it gave a team possession so close to the goal that they could kick a field goal. It was our tough luck."

Manassas Fullback Breaks Leg, Team Loses

Manassas, Va., Oct. 15.—The Manassas High football team, whose co-Capt. Maury Wells was removed from the game after the opening kickoff with a fractured leg, absored a 27-15 beating at the hands of Warren County High yesterday despite the efforts of reserves. Grady and Roseberry tallied for the locals, and Wolfe tackled Warren's back, E. White, behind the goal for a safety, but it wasn't enough.

and fancy-stepping Dick Todd, 170-pounder from Texas A. and M.

But it was an old Redskin favorite—Andy Farkas—who injected the wildest scoring note into the game, early in the third quarter when the Redskins' 19-14 lead appeared none too secure in the face of a vicious Pittsburgh ground assault that harnessed all the fearsome power of bucking Sam Francis.

Farkas' Long Touchdown Run

Back on the Redskins' one-yard line a holding penalty had placed the ball and then the Redskins gambled. From a half dozen yards behind the goal, Frank Filchock unloosed a pass. Barely drifting across the goal, Farkas took the ball, a short lob, on his own four-yard line and commenced to run.

On his own 30-yard line, Farkas deftly sidestepped the Pirates' safety man. Seventy clear yards were ahead, and the denouement was a laugh. With Redskin blockers sprouting like guardian angels—Jay Turner and Charlie Malone, in particular—Farkas merely had to keep running. Malone, with pointing finger, romped alongside the ball carrier and actually directed Farkas' course over the last fifty yards with not a Pirate within shouting distance.

Coming events began to cast their shadows as early as the first play of the game. Bo Russell kicked off to McCullough, who attempted to wrench loose from a pair of tacklers on his 14-yard line. Dick Farman bore down on McCullough, tackled him high, and found himself in possession of the ball. On the next play German drifted around right end, shook off a tackler near the sidelines to avert a loss on the play, and scored standing up behind Johnston, Slivinski and Parks.

Then the Pirates began a vengeful counter-attack. Ten times big Sam Francis carried the ball on a 73-yard march, banging and knifing through the Redskins' rookie line. Unstoppable, he nosed over the goal finally on a last-down slam through right guard. And when Nicolai place-kicked the point the Pirates had a 7-6 lead.

Back stormed the Redskins on the next kickoff. German took the ball, jogged warily behind his blockers till he reached the 30-yard line, and then went for himself on a dazzling gallop down the sidelines. Eighty-four yards he took the ball before Platukis shoved him out of bounds on the Pirates' 13. He moved moved the ball to the 1-foot line in a slam through tackle, and then took it over.

But the Redskins' 13-7 lead vanished shortly after the start of the second period. McDonough galloped 56 yards with the neck kickoff before Safety Man German hauled him down and the Pirates then turned to the air for a touchdown. With Thomasetti and Littlefield chucking passes they advanced deep into Redskin territory and Littlefield then bit off a 13-yard chunk around right end to put the ball on the 1-yard line. Hurled back on three running plays the Pirates scored when McDonough took a pass from Thomasetti, and when Nicolai kicked the point it was 14-13, Pittsburgh.

A penalty helped the Redskins to regain the lead before the period was over. Filchock, who completed six out of seven passes yesterday, unfurled a 31-yard heave to Malone on the Pirete eleven, and a bit later Thomasetti was detected pushing Millner on a pass play in the end zone and the Redskins were given the ball on the 1-yard line. Farkas bumped it across.

Came the third period and the wildest display of the afternoon. The Filchock-to-Farkas play covered 99 yards, 96 of it on the ground. With the Pirates helpless to gain, Filchock lobbed another of his passes to Todd who sidestepped Grabinski on the 20-yard line and then trotted to a touchdown behind no less than a group of Redskin blockers on a 24-yard run.

That made it 32-14 and Todd was reinstated into the game. He wasn't long in breaking loose. On the Redskins' 40-yard line, he broke through tackle on a quick-opening play, took refuge behind the bulky Edwards' blocking, moved into the clear and cantered unmolested 60 yards to a touchdown. Those three touchdowns were all that happened in the third quarter, but as a final flip in the fourth, Ed Justice took the ball from Meade on a reverse play and stepped off 32 yards to the goal.

Big Six Teams Prove Power Over Outsiders

Four Nonconference Teams Are Trampled In Week-End Battling

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, Oct. 15.—Four more nonconference opponents of Big Six teams gathered at the gridiron "Wailing Wall" today with a group total of 12 points, 12 first downs—and no victories.

This batch of victims wasn't up to the same high calibre of a week ago when Minnesota and Northwestern were felled, but previously unbeaten Texas saw the linesman's chains move ahead only three times as Oklahoma triumphed, 24 to 12.

Kansas State quieted Colorado, 20 to 0, while permitting the Buffaloes a lone first down and an offensive aggregate of minus 13 yards. Missouri allowed Washington University, a September choice for the Missouri Valley title, two first downs in the Tigers' 14-to-0 conquest.

Kansas Line Weak

Colorado State had a bit more success with Kansas, making the grade six times to 15 for the Jayhawks. And without shedding a tear, Coach Gwinn Henry can show you his line is the weakest in the Big Six.

In their four nonconference triumphs the Big Six teams scored a point for each of their collective 65 first downs.

Nebraska snared a shaky 10 to 7 verdict over Iowa State with the Huskers also having a narrow margin in first downs, 6 to 5.

Beryl Clark, pint-sized substitute, was instrumental in the Oklahoma victory. His actions almost made Big Tom Stidham forget that Jack Jacobs, fleet Indian back, was kept on the bench throughout the fray with Texas.

Clark Scores Twice

Clark slammed through the line for one tally and swirled 33 yards through the opposition for a second after fielding a lateral from Bill Jennings.

This week Oklahoma makes its first appearance against a Big Six team, meeting Kansas at Norman. Missouri and Kansas State also open their conference play at Columbia. The Wildcast continued their unbeaten habit against Colorado but if Elmer Hackney's injury sidelines him Saturday the Missouria chances become distinctly brighter.

Giants Rout Eagles, 27-10

ond half when Hank Soar intercepted one of Dave Smukler's passes and raced 40 yards across the goal line. He placekicked the point.

Starting on their own 20-yard line a few minutes later the Giants drove 53 yards on four stabbing passes by Ed Danowski and then, when stalled by the blue-clad visitors, Ward Cuffs dropped back on fourth down to the 38-yard line and placekicked a field goal.

Fumble Aids Giants

A fumble by Joe Bukant gave the Giants the ball on Philadelphia's 20-yard line early in the final chapter and they quickly snapped up another touchdown. Tuffy Leemans galloped to the 9-yard stripe in two tries, Len Barnum passed to Leemans on the one, and Barnum banged through leftguard for the score.

The first quarter was calm until Chuck Newton intercepted a pass in midfield and set up a field goal chance which Hank Reese made good from 43 yards out in the longest placekick of the pro season.

In the second period a fumble by Barnum was snatched up by Lineman Ted Schmitt, who outgalloped the Giants 63 yards for a touchdown to which Fran Murray added the extra point.

The Giants had an advantage in first downs of 13 to 7.

Bill Bennings

At the Post

Selections at Laurel

Dear Al,

If you were there you will remember that terrible start of the third race last Thursday in which Little Harpist, Hiblaze, Giboir and others stood in the gate while the remainder of the field got away. I was about to write a few nice words about Starter Milton's good work this year, but I sidetracked them after seeing that mess. Since, I have learned from one of the jockeys that it was not Milton's fault and I believe he is due this explanation. When he had the horses in alignment, he yelled his usual, "Come on" and pressed the button. For some reason the bell rang softly, or did not ring, and while the riders knew what it was all about some of the horses, used to starting at the sound of the bell, just wouldn't get going. One Benningite brings out an interesting angle on the public address system that is very logical. He says that one announcement in one day will pay for the whole set-up. That announcement is: "You may' bet until the horses break." Challedon's owner and trainer should be in a quandary. In the colt's last two races he had been piloted to victory by Jockey George Woolf, and in several previous victories by Jockey Harry Richards. However, the unhappy predicament of Owner Brann and Trainer Schaefer is caused by the fact that Woolf is scheduled to ride Kayak 2d in the Pimlico Special on November 1 and Harry Richards is just recuperating from an appendectomy and will be out of the saddle for several months. Woolf is the regular rider for the Howard stable and it appears certain a new rider will be aboard Challedon. The Brann star seems destined to be the favorite in the Special and hence there is an abundance of applications for the riding assignment. The stewards have threatened with suspension jockeys who hit their mounts over the head to keep them from running out at the turns. What about boys who are in ahead and inside of another horse, whipping on the front of their mounts and using this for an excuse to wave the whip in the eyes of an oncoming horse? At least one race last week was decided by this method, at least in my book. Just to keep the record straight I picked the winner. BILL.

First race—Fort Wales stopped badly in the final test competing against a similar band of platers recently, but previous to that effort held his own with better company. May stick it out today. Madam Capet beat the top horse last start and gets a good figure. Scorch is long overdue and may surprise.

Second race—Steve Brody was favored to beat a speedy field of timber toppers in his last New York trial but failed to show his accustomed effort. In a good spot today and we'll string along. Autumnquest needed her last and should show improvement. Coxswain figures to take care of the others.

Third race—Argella, after several indifferent efforts on the local circuit, is reported fit and ready for her best. The cool weather has the filly on edge. Billionaire will be the one to beat on the merits of consistent trials with this sort. Clapair drops down. May be sleeper.

Fourth race—Isaroma was a bit outmatched in the Capitol Handicap, but in New York races displayed his ability to win in this company. Sammie needed his last race and if ready has the speed to contend with the top horse. Court Dance runs good and bad races. Best effort should earn third place.

Fifth race—Fairy Chant, among others, beat Yarnith in an overnight race last start and the latter was installed odds-on choice to win the Maryland Futurity. Well placed here and should score an easy victory. Baby Sister had fair form in New York; may be runner-up. Cummer Time has a good money chance.

Sixth race—Bass Wood bowed to Thelluson last outing, where he was heavily favored. He meets competition of a cheaper sort today and should be up for a score. Birch Rod has been closing well in sprints. Best effort would be dangerous. Up the Creek just missed last start and figures to be close.

Seventh race—Airacuda unleashed a stretch run which carried her into second place in her last heat. These better grade platers don't figure to match that speed today. Tanganyika has been a disappointment since this spring, but conditions are favorable here to produce a good showing. Shambles for the show.

Eighth race—Moon Harvest turned back a better field in last week's race and should repeat at the expense of these cheap ones. Black Bread was speedy at Havre and will be the one to catch. Conville has an excellent chance, but watch the betting on this one.

Best bet—Fairy Chant.

Edrington's Lady Avon Leading When Timé Limit Expires

An erratic breeze and a strong ebb tide cheated Judge Prentice Edrington, of Washington, of his fifth straight victory for the Old Dominion Boat Club Trophy yesterday as the sailing races in the fall series of the Potomac River Association were held off Alexandria. The judge, leading in his fast little Lady Avon in the 20-foot feature class, was unable to finish under the time limit.

Two other races, the Class A Handicap and the Penguin Class were also called "no race" for the same reason—time limits. In the Comet Class, first event on the program, Clarke Daniel, sailing Robert E. Lee, beat out a strong field by more than 12 minutes.

COMET CLASS—Won by Clarke Daniel in Robert E. Lee; second, Lesley Wright, in Arcoiris; third, Henry Brylawski, in Nimbus. Winning time, 0:58.24.

CLASS A HANDICAP—No race (three starters unable to finish under time limit).

CLASS B HANDICAP—Won by Enos Ray in Flying Cloud; second Joe Voith in Swallow; third, Dr. Ralph Barnhardt in Black Cat. Winning time, 1:14.11.

Packers Rout Gunners, 31-0, Before 11,000

Herber-to-Hutson Combine Clicks for Victors in Exhibition

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Oct. 15.—The Green Bay Packers of the National Professional Football League scored an easy 31 to 0 triumph over the St. Louis Gunners before a crowd of 11,000 in an exhibition game here today.

The Green Bay regulars scored only one of the touchdowns, but that one was a sensation featuring the famous Herber-to-Hutson pass combination.

Midway through the second period Eng Hutson, who plays halfback on defense, intercepted a Tommy Thompson pass on his own 18-yard line and returned it to the 21.

Two plays later he sprinted down the field as Arnie Herber faded back 15 yards and pitched a high spiral after him. Hutson sprinted past the Gunner safety man and after Herber's toss carried 70 yards through the air, Don grabbed it on the 5-yard line, babies it a bit on his finger-tips, then clutched it definitely as he stumbled into the end zone.

Another intercepted pass led to a touchdown when Charley Brock, Nebraska's great center a year ago, snatched one on the Gunners' 40 and carried the ball to the 12-yard line.

Ernie Smith kicked two extra points and booted a 21-yard field goal.

Jacunski	L.E.	Gainor
Smith	L.T.	Beinor

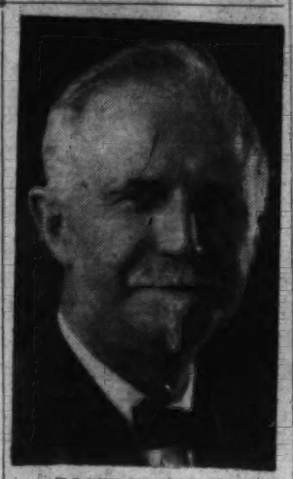
Babson Sees Record Activity For U. S. Merchant Marine

U. S. and Japan Will Take Over Bulk Of Reich World Commerce, He Says, While War Will Keep Britain and France Busy

By Roger W. Babson

San Francisco, Oct. 15.—The first result of the war to be noticed on the Pacific Ocean is the big increase in activity along the commerce lanes. The European War has hog-tied three of the leading trading nations of the world. Japan and the United States are falling heir to most of Germany's world commerce. Moreover, with England and France hardly able to hold their present trade, the United States and Japan will get the lion's share of the immense increase in world commerce which any extended European War inevitably means. America's Merchant Marine, now second largest in the world, will enjoy its busiest days since 1920.



ROGER W. BABSON

The richest commercial prize that Germany's lack of seapower has forced her to give up is her trade with Latin America. As I see it, the only obstacle to a boom in our trade with South American nations is the lack of buying power of these countries. Our difficulty is to find additional products which we can take from South America in exchange for our manufactured goods. Wool, hides, nitrates, and coffee can be imported, of course. But Latin America's principal surpluses are copper, oil and farm products. These we do not need. The riddle will be partially solved by our selling manufactured goods to South America, carrying her food products to Europe and bringing back such things as glassware, olive oil, linen and china.

Europe to Pay Cash

Europe must increase her use of South American food. She will have to pay for it in cash rather than by the barter method of the past few years. This additional cash should help to solve South America's problem of finding the necessary buying power to purchase American goods. Moreover, the United States will probably contribute substantially by extending additional credits to South America through our Export-Import Bank. We have already granted substantial credits to Brazil and other Latin-American countries.

Biggest gain in our world commerce will be in our manufactured goods. These were the type of goods that Germany was selling in South America and in other parts of the world. Japan and the United States will grab most of Germany's and some of France's and Britain's former trade in such products as cutlery, bicycles, railroad equipment, chemicals, machinery, high-grade textiles and the like. We should have the upper hand over Japan, particularly in the case of the most highly specialized manufactures, because Japan's products are cheap in quality and narrow in range of selection. With the present line-up of belligerents, I cannot, however, see any immediate big increase in our exports of farm products—not even cotton.

Shipyards at Capacity

Our seaports—particularly along the gulf—will see great activity. Shipyards, already busy in turning out warships, will be pushed to capacity in the building of new cargo boats. Furthermore, if the neutrality act is amended, much of the world trade going to neutral nations will be carried in American boats. The German and British navies will know that American ships will not be carrying even a loaf of bread to the belligerent nations. Shippers will like this additional safety of our vessels and will find the resulting low war risk insurance on American ships attractive. Hence, busy days are ahead for the American merchant marine. I doubt, however, if this active era for our shipping will continue after the war is over. As I arrive home from my trip to the Orient, I am convinced of one thing: Japan and China can together create the most formidable industrial machine in the world. They can make and export products at unbelievably low prices. They can sweep the goods of every other nation, with the possible exception of Russia, off the seas. The only way other nations can compete with Japan and China is by entirely changing their present economic setup.

Self-Sufficiency a Snare

I am very bullish on the United States for the next few years, but sooner or later we are going into a real depression. As I reflect on living habits and standards in my home town of Wellesley, they seem so artificial and wasteful that I wonder how long they can continue. We are all living in a fool's paradise with no regard for what the future has in store for our children.

By our policy of isolation and our walls of tariff are we not following the Chinese? The reason China is so weak today is because her people felt sufficient unto themselves and refused to compete with the rest of the world in scientific methods and progressive learning. We are as foolish in reducing hours and fixing prices as were the Chinese in their belief that because they were the greatest, oldest and richest nation they had nothing to fear. I wonder if some day there may be a parallel in our histories. We expect to save ourselves by a great tariff wall just as the Chinese tried to save themselves by a great stone wall.

Japan Our Industrial "Enemy"

The Japanese have kept their heads and have not tried such silly notions. As a result, I think that they can, with the help of China, control the manufactures of the world. The United States can keep out foreign goods with a tariff wall; but our wall cannot prevent the Japanese from flooding our customers in South and Central America and in other world markets with manufactured goods.

America, to save herself, must change her attitude toward union labor, price-fixing, hour limitations, and the like. I wish Frances Perkins had been with me on my trip. I am not appealing for manufacturers. I know their faults. I am advocating that we cut out all artificial stuff and be ready to compete with the rest of the world now and in the future. To do this we must adjust wages, hours and living habits. Such a policy is the only one which will save our children and grandchildren.

Steel Output Climbs to Near Present Limit

Operating Rate Rises To 89½ Per Cent of Capacity in Week

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 15.—A 2-point rise pushed steel production to 89½ per cent of capacity last week as operations approached the available limit, the magazine Steel said today.

"Delays will be encountered in engaging remaining capacity, and subsequent gains will be reduced by temporary shutdowns of some furnaces for repairs," the weekly review of the steel industry reported.

Buying has dropped off because most large consumers are covered for the remainder of the year, and mills can accept little additional business in most products for fourth quarter delivery.

Few orders have been placed to protect first quarter needs, pending establishment of first quarter prices which, Steel said, are "complicated by the various factors which may influence future production costs."

Higher Prices Expected

Prices will be announced soon, however, and higher quotations on leading products "appear certain" with a $3 a ton increase already made on reinforcing bars.

A reaction in scrap markets lowered steel's composite 33 cents last week to $21.83.

Tin plate production reached a peak for the year, advancing two points to 92 per cent.

Steelmaking gains were shown in most districts, although shutdown of open-hearth furnaces for repairs retarded some increases. The rate advanced three points to 86 per cent at Pittsburgh; 1½ points to 87½ at Chicago; 4 points to 94 at Youngstown; 1 point to 90 at Cleveland; 4 points to 90 at Birmingham; 2 points to 86 at Cincinnati; 2½ points to 74½ at St. Louis; eastern Pennsylvania, points to 68, and 5 points to 88½ at Buffalo. New England dropped 10 points to 90, and Detroit 2 points to 98. Wheeling, at 93, was unchanged.

Largest Swiss Bank Opens New York Agency

New York, Oct. 15.—For the purpose of knitting commercial and investment ties between Switzerland and the United States more closely together, Swiss Bank Corporation, largest banking institution in Switzerland, today announced the opening of an agency in New York at 15 Nassau street. The agency, located at the northwest corner of Nassau and Pine streets, will have also extensive vaults for their own use, for safeguarding the securities of their large international clientele.

F. W. Lichtensteiger, of Basle, Switzerland, well known figure in international banking circles, and Francesco L. Saroli, of Lugano, Switzerland, who has had wide banking experience in London, New York, and on the continent, will direct the management of the New York agency.

Swiss Bank Corporation New York Agency is the first agency to be established in this country by a Swiss bank. The total assets of Swiss Bank Corporation are 1,451,067,000 Swiss francs, and capital and reserves amount to 194,000,000 Swiss francs. The head office of the bank is located at Basle, Switzerland. It is a general commercial bank operating 13 branches and 5 agencies in Switzerland, an office and a branch agency in London, and has correspondents throughout the world.

Railroad Efficiency

In each of the eight consecutive years after 1922 American railroads handled, without car shortages or congestion, traffic greatly in excess of that transported annually in the World War period, the Association of American Railroads reports.

Air Conditioning Makes Dusting Less Necessary

Air conditioning is bringing more leisure to housewives, officials of the Air Conditioning Manufacturers' Association assert. Because modern air conditioning equipment constantly filters the air circulated throughout the house, the chore of dusting is necessary only once a week, on the average, instead of every day.

Train 'Light-Conditioned'

The first "light-conditioned" railroad car in the United States, equipped with polaroid variable density windows, has been placed in service.

Germany to Pay $25 For $35 Coupons

New York, Oct. 15 (AP).—The German consulate general announced today the October 15 payment on the German external (Dawes) loan of 1924 in the United States would be made on the basis of $25 per $35 face amount of the coupon.

This represented no change from the April 15 payment. Bondholders have the alternative of taking payment in "blocked" marks, limited to specific uses in Germany.

'Go-and-See' Tours of Chest Begin Today With Exhibit by 38 Agencies at Hotel

"We'll be on hand to welcome you," say these two babies in a basket who are numbered among the hundreds of children sheltered in Community Chest supported institutions. The public is invited to join the "Go-and-See" tours sponsored by the Community Chest League from October 17 through November 4

Problems of providing for Washington's human needs will come to life today before the eyes of citizens who visit an exhibit of 38 Community Chest agencies in the Mayflower Hotel promenade.

Statistics will be translated into the contentment of a child at play, and into the cheer of older boys and girls busy at handcrafts. The youngsters will appear at an exhibition which will set off "Go and See" tours of the Chest.

The exhibit will be open from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m. today. The Community Chest League will hold its keynote luncheon at 12:30. In the following two weeks Washington citizens will be given first-hand information on the work of Chest agencies.

A half dozen children from St. Ann's Infant Asylum, children from settlement houses, boys' clubs, and from other Chest agencies will animate an array of charts and photographs lined up for today's exhibition.

"Givers and friends who wish to broaden their knowledge of how human needs are met through the Chest member agencies will have an unrivaled opportunity between now and November 3, if they will only take advantage of it," Mrs. Stanley Reed, chairman of the league, said yesterday.

Citizens in groups of four or more may have free transportation on tours with the motor corps of the Community Chest League donating cars and services. Arrangements may be made for a group by calling Chest headquarters, Metropolitan 2284.

Fifty-six of the 67 Chest agencies will have an "open house" period on one of the days between now and November 3. The four that will welcome visitors tomorrow are Phyllis Wheatley, Y. W. C. A., 901 Rhode Island avenue northwest, 8 to 10 p. m.; St. Joseph's Home and School, Eastern avenue and Bunker Hill road northeast, 2 to 4 p. m.; Episcopal Home for Children, Nebraska and Utah avenues northwest, 2 to 4 p. m.; Girls Club of Alexandria, 217 North St. Asaph street, Alexandria, 3:30 to 5 p. m.

Forest Service Tests 'Chutes To Fight Fires

Men Would Be Dropped From Planes Near Small, Remote Blazes

By the Associated Press

Fire fighters soon may be jumping from airplanes in parachutes to put out blazes in Uncle Sam's national forests.

In tests at the Chelan National Forest in the State of Washington, "smokechasers" equipped with fire-fighting tools, have been dropped successfully from planes in specially designed parachutes which may be steered.

Officials said fire fighting by this aerial method would save thousands of dollars annually by enabling the forest service to get quick control of small fires in remote sections. Under present overland combat methods, such blazes often spread into devastating conflagrations before fighters are able to reach them.

The aerial fighters wear special protective clothing. Their suits are made of heavy duck padded with sponge rubber. They also have headgear fitted with steel face masks and neck protectors and other devices designed to protect vital parts of the body from possible injury in landing.

Under plans being tested, fire-fighting tools, a two-day emergency food ration, water, a compass, maps and a first-aid kit, and perhaps a light radio set for communication, would be dropped from the plane in a small parachute ahead of the jumper.

Men selected for the hazardous task will be hardened and experienced fire fighters now in employ of the forest service.

Upon landing, the fighter will crawl out of his protective suit, free himself of the parachute, retrieve his equipment and strike out for the nearby fire. Two or three men may be dropped on the same spot. When the fire has been extinguished, the aerial fighter will then pack his parachute, suit and tools back to the nearest road or trail to return to headquarters. The weight of the entire outfit is about 60 pounds.

The specially designed parachute has met all Army and Navy requirements. It is said to be much safer than the common-type parachute, in that it tends to reduce the extreme swinging back and forth of the jumper, thus lessening the chance of his being thrown against trees or rocks upon landing.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

"In a three-table game of conversational bridge the other night I stole all four aces from a deck as I was leaving the table," commences W. D. F. as he tells of playing a trick on four unsuspecting rubber-bridge players who were mixing their bids with gossip.

"Distribution was unusual in the ensuing deal, and the hand was bid to three no trump. The theft was discovered when declarer claimed his contract, with nine tricks, while the opponents conceded an over-trick with only three tricks in front of him!

"It must have been an interesting conversation running throughout that hand."

We recall a similar instance when the aces were taken from the deck. This declarer also played three no trump. Nearing the conclusion of the hand, he said to his adversary, "Now you can have those four aces you've been holding up throughout the play."

Opening lead: J ♡

Confused bidding led to the disastrous opening lead, which allowed East to steal three no trump doubled on today's hand. It was contributed by the unfortunate South player, who, aided by the strange development of the auction, chose to lead his partner's suit, instead of his own. Had he led clubs, five tricks could have been won immediately to set the bid. With the heart opening declarer took the ace of hearts, ran her diamonds and succeeded in making two extra spade tricks when North and South, demoralized and squeezed for discards, held on to their clubs. East made six no trump, losing one club trick.

Chapter 23

The interview was over! The secretary-acolyte, her skirts wafting incense, showed him out. The Gothic elevator dropped him twenty-four stories to the entrance hall. He stood downstairs in this narthex of the temple, marble inlays to his right, gilded bas-reliefs to his left, and felt like flinging his hat up to the Renaissance coffered ceiling. Not till the June Trustee meeting would he need to hear Mr. Wheaton's voice again.

AS TIMOTHY SAT, waiting to be served, in the inexpensive restaurant where he ate his lunch, he noted with an ironic eye the frieze of urgently worded notices on the walls, warning patrons that any belongings left for a moment unguarded might be whisked away by nimbly thieving big-city fingers. "Oh, yes," he told himself, "I must not forget that I am at the hub of twentieth-century civilization," and thinking of the never-locked Clifford house doors, he moved his hat and coat from a hook just behind him, to one in plain sight and in reach of his arm.

He was hungry. But he ate very little. The combative hatred always aroused in him by personal contact with that old-American, George Wheaton, had fallen. Now he did not so much hate him as fear what such a man could do to make life intolerable for those who believed in the standards Timothy Hulme tried to impart to his students. Yet—he had this thought after every talk with the rich man—old Wheaton himself was no better, no worse than any other ordinary coarse-fibered old man with an undistinguished mind and plenty of energy. There were men like that in every collection of human beings anywhere. Clifford had its share of them. Timothy could name three or four, no better, made of the same stuff. Yet he neither hated nor feared them. On the contrary he often thought that one of life's sure-fire comic effects was the combination of their utter ignorance of anything but a few material processes, and the massive weightiness with which such men pronounced judgment on questions civilized people knew to be so complex as to be insoluble. To hear one of them talking about books or music was as good entertainment as reading a Horatian satire. But although he realized that Mr. Wheaton provided the same farce-stuff, he never found him laughable. Sometimes he shuddered at the old man's coarse insensitiveness to human values and his wallowing like a great hog in self-admiration; sometimes he hated everything about him to the buttons on his superbly tailored clothes. Why should he take with such painful seriousness a man who was (outside the world of money) only a grotesquerie of pretentious ignorance? Why did he waste hatred on what was no more than despicable?

Grumbling his bread and looking down moodily at his cooling plate of stew, the schoolteacher from the country sent his mind searching for the answer to this question. It lay of course on the surface. That a man totally ignorant of civilized standards and values should fancy himself an arbiter of those values was the same absurdity in Mr. Wheaton's case as in that of many another man with a thick, Stone-Age skull. Yet Mr. Wheaton was not absurd, he was a terrible and awful power of evil, and what made him so was his money, was the mountain of dollars from which he ruled people, institutions, human endeavors he was proud of not being able to understand. Hospitals, colleges, universities, museums of fine arts, laboratories for research—he was on the directing board of all these. There was no counting the number of noble enterprises put in Mr. Wheaton's power by money, like a club in his fist to beat down fineness and delicacy of feeling whenever he caught sight of it. There was no comedy in that. The swaggering boor who fancies himself a cultivated man of honor is traditionally a figure of fun—his mind roamed from Terence to Moliere—yes, but hardly when his forefinger with its dirty nail is crooked around the trigger of a loaded machine gun.

At this point his mind, deploring heat of feeling in the weighing of evidence, bade him beware of falling into the vulgar error of generalizing from one case, reminded him that money in the possession of a man of decent standards is as great a power for good as Mr. Wheaton's for evil, and pointed out that it was unfair to hold Mr. Wheaton responsible for the fact that other men, because of his ability to get and keep money, gave a damnable weight to his opinions on art, on education, on the care of the sick, on—of all things!—matters of taste. He personally would have been harmless enough if he had been subjected in norman human relations to the ordinary give-and-take checks on egotism. What was a blame was the fawning yes-yes on all subjects which was society's reaction to his many dollars. What had turned him into a monster had been the long years of unmerited, unquestioned authority in matters he knew nothing about. "Good heavens!" thought Timothy with passionate unreason. "Is there a millhand, a backroads farmer in Clifford who has so little respect for things too fine for him to understand, who has so little sense of human dignity—that man to talk about the harm Jews might do this America!"

With a gesture of anger he did not know he was making, he swept his glass of water from the table and gave his ironic bark of laughter to see it roll along the floor unbroken. "A brave, big-city glass!" he apostrophized it, picking it up. "A thoroughly hardboiled, urban glass guaranteed to have no instincts delicate enough to be breakable." He ordered apple pie for his dessert (misguidedly remembering Miss Peck's pie) but when it came, crouching withered and clammy on his plate, he picked up his hat and went to pay his check.

DOROTHY CANFIELD

HIS NEXT appointment was with a Mr. and Mrs. McCann, parents of a prospective student. The address was in the upper East Eighties, probably an old brownstone house made into an apartment. He wondered why people with an adolescent daughter were not in the suburbs. Well, how should he, this time, manage this recurrent big-city business of getting himself from where he was to somewhere else? He had had enough of the subway for one day, and marched off across town toward the Madison avenue bus line, passing great plate-glass show-windows filled with handsome objects for sale, being passed by towering trucks loaded with things for sale, turning and veering on the crowded sidewalks to avoid collision with the men hurrying to sell, the women hurrying to buy.

Mr. McCann, the father of Jane, turned out to be a public high school teacher, and Mrs. McCann to be a librarian in a branch of the public library. They were a pleasant, tired couple with a pleasant gawky daughter of 15 whose front teeth were being straightened. Their apartment was, as he had expected, the second floor of an old brownstone house. From one look at the long, narrow front room where they received him, he knew, anyone would have known, just what quarters they had—this room, another like it in the back, between them a kitchenette made out of the old washroom, and across the hall something or other for the little girl's bedroom. Or perhaps she slept on the couch where she and her mother now sat. And when she was sick—he remembered the cluttered, dirty, hall bedroom where he and Downer had slept and eaten and washed and cooked and been sick.

He was rather surprised to see that the child did not look sickly. The usual reason for sending a student to a country school was health. The father said, "No, Jane's not a delicate child. Not at all. But you know—or do you?—what a New York public high school is like."

The Vermont teacher said he had taught for a while in one, many years ago, but had not seen one for some time. So the city teacher told him—6,000 students in one building, the corridors between classes as jammed, pushing and dangerous as the subway in rush hour, the lunchroom a yelling mob snatching at platefuls of hastily slammed-down food, the long lines waiting for a chance at the drinking fountain, the constant need to keep your possessions in sight or locked up because of incessant thieving, one of Jane's teachers a paranoiac, kept in her place by political influence; all of the teachers, even the best of them, sunk by numbers. "Do you know how often Jane recites? Two minutes, twice a week. Do you know how the teachers correct English compositions? Well, you teach English; just think for yourself what would happen if you had 250 in your classes, writing compositions. How many would you throw away unread and uncorrected? And do you know what happens sometimes in the toilet rooms when the crowd is so thick that . . ."

"I see," said Timothy Hulme. "But, listen, you're a colleague of mine—do you know what a beggarly country school in a poor mountain town is like?"

"We've read your catalogue from cover to cover," said McCann, and his wife, added earnestly, "We like your ideas about discussion groups and assignments by the week, and domestic science that teaches young people to use what they have."

Jane's father said, "We can hardly believe there's a school within our means where Jane'll have somebody really trying to teach her something, not just trying to keep hell from breaking loose. She won't know how to act!"

THE PRINCIPAL of Clifford Academy laughed ironically. "Didn't you ever read any other school catalogues? Don't yon know what is left out of a catalogue—by intention? I'll just tell you some of the things left out of ours. Our gymnasium is an old barn, heated by a wood stove. And we'll probably never have anything else. Some of the seats in our classrooms were there during the Civil War. I mean literally. Our heating plant is 40 years old. The woodwork hasn't been painted since—since the American Revolution! Our edition of the Britannica is the 1911 one. Our teachers are frightfully underpaid—and not very well trained. One of them is worn out and only hanging on because there's no provision for pensions. Many of our students come clumping in straight from the farm and lots of them use the double negative when they first appear at the academy. We haven't had a new——"

"From 12 to 20."

The McCanns looked at each other, exulting. "Do the students have a chance to see anything of the teachers outside the classrooms? Would Jane, for instance, be in personal touch with you?"

"Oh, as to that, yes. Everybody in a small school and a small town sees everybody else all the time. The house where I live is at one end of the main building."

"Let me tell you a story, Mr. Hulme," said the father of Jane, "to give you some idea of the size of our building, and the kind of life the children have. At the beginning of our last term, a teacher in our department reported one of the freshman boys absent from her class four days in succession, where he was by her list due to be present. We looked up his record and found he'd been at school those days, so I sent for him to come to the office. He turned out to be an anxious little kid, 12 or 13 years old, whose family had just moved in from up-State somewhere. And he said the trouble was he couldn't find his English section. 'I have a gym period just before my English,' he told me, 'and when I leave that to go to my English class, I can't find the way. The first day I came out on the roof. And the next day in the basement. After I'd been miles up and down the halls every direction I could, I thought, 'Well, I know how to get to that English class from the front door. If I went out and came in from outside I could get it.' So I went out a side door but when I tried to come in the front door the big boys wouldn't let me . . ."

Mrs. McCann broke in to explain, "That's the squad of seniors stationed there to keep the tardy students from slipping into their classes without reporting."

Her husband went on, "The kid ended up, 'If I could only find Benny he could take me to that class, Benny knows the way. But he's got a different gym period from mine and I never see him any more.'"

"Poor child!" said Mrs. McCann compassionately.

"Well, yes, I get your point," admitted Timothy, "but I'm afraid you'll only find it like St. Lawrence asking to be turned over on his griddle."

"That edition of the Britannica is really better than the latest one," said the librarian mother, evidently presenting this fact as a symbol.

"Let's see Jane's report cards," said Timothy.

THEY WERE all right. Jane was all right. She was, in fact, it seemed to the principal, like any one of hundreds of nice little girls with gold bands on their teeth who had passed through his classes. The question of tuition came up. The McCanns did not ask for a reduction of tuition, but they laid their family budget before him and inquired if there was any fair way in which Jane's living expenses might be lessened. Mr. McCann's salary was considerably more than that of the principal of Clifford Academy; and in addition there was the pay of Mrs. McCann—although T. C. was shocked by the meager salary given librarians by the great and rich city. Their combined income came to more than half as much again as his own. Yes. But the rent they paid for the two light and the one dark room they lived in! The hours of Mrs. McCann's work, they explained, obliged them to live there, instead of moving to the suburbs. The price of milk, butter and eggs! The bill from the New York dentist (also paying New York rents) who was straightening Jane's teeth! They had not yet caught up on the doctor's bill from last winter's flu. They always had a good many doctor's bills. They had not been to a theater in four years. Mrs. McCann's winter coat was in its fifth year. They never bought books. They had no savings account. There was an ancient aunt, back up-state, to whose support they felt obliged to contribute their share.

To Be Continued.

Freeman Talks At Huguenot Observance

Revocation of Edict of Nantes Is Commemorated

Unless men come to realize the value of common worship in human life, the world cannot hope for peace, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, yesterday afternoon told members of the Huguenot Society of Washington at their annual rites in Washington Cathedral.

Delivered at evensong services, following a brief service in the Chapel of Joseph of Arimathea near the memorial tablet of Admiral Gaspard De Coligny, great Huguenot leader, Bishop Freeman's address was keyed to the significance of the society's observance, and also to the 150th anniversary of the adoption of the American prayer-book, celebrated yesterday.

Canon Theodore O. Wedel, Chancellor of the Cathedral, and the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, Warden of the College of Preachers and Dean of the Cathedral, led the earlier service. Among the Huguenot Society leaders present were Mrs. Frank B. Steele, president; Mrs. Joseph S. Wall, Mrs. Everard R. Todd and Mrs. Norman Underwood, vice presidents; Mrs. Brinkley E. Callicott and Mrs. E. C. Purvis, secretaries; Mrs. Albert L. Rheinstrom, treasurer; Mrs. William W. Badgley, registrar; Dr. Charles L. Carhart, chaplain, and Miss Helen Belle Smith, librarian.

This season commemorates the 254th anniversary of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which brought a period of persecution to French Protestants.

College Honors Gen. Marshall

Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States Army, received the honorary degree of doctor of science at an annual homecoming-founder's day celebration of Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pa., yesterday.

At the ceremony Gov. Arthur H. James of Pennsylvania said, according to the Associated Press, "this is not the dusk . . . but the dawn of democracy."

Rev. Marcel Brun Conducts Service

The Rev. Marcel J. Brun, temporary pastor of the local French congregation, which meets at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, yesterday afternoon predicted the present war crisis will eventually unite, rather than separate peoples and nations.

Speaking in place of the Rev. Andre Liotard, regular leader, who recently was mobilized into the French army, the Rev. Mr. Brun said he felt the crisis would result in more fellowships and a sense of solidarity.
